eyk-reiði, n. the harness of an eykr, Gpl. 358. EYKT, eykd, f. three or half-past three o'clock p.m.; many commentaries have been written upon this word, as by Pal Vidalfn Skýr., Finn Johnson in H. E. i. 153 sqq. note 6, and in Horologium, etc. The time of eykd is clearly defined in K. p. K. 92 as the time when the sun has past two parts of the 'útsuðr' (q. v.) and has one part left, that is to say, half-past three o'clock p.m.: it thus nearly coincides with the eccl. Lat. nona (three o'clock p.m.); and both eykt and nona are therefore used indiscriminately in some passages. Sunset at the time of 'eykd' is opposed to sunrise at the time of 'dagmál,' q. v. In Norway 'ykt' means a luncheon taken about half-past three o'clock. But the passage in Edda—that autumn ends and winter begins at sunset at the time of eykt—confounded the commentators, who believed it to refer to the conventional Icel. winter, which (in the old style) begins with the middle of October, and lasts six months. In the latitude of Reykholt—the residence of Snorri—the sun at this time sets about half-past four. Upon this statement the commentators have based their reasoning both in regard to dagmál and eykt, placing the eykt at half-past four p.m. and dagmál at half-past seven a.m., although this contradicts the definition of these terms in the law. The passage in Edda probably came from a foreign source, and refers not to the Icel. winter but to the astronomical winter, viz. the winter solstice or the shortest day; for sunset at half-past three is suited not to Icel., but to the latitude of Scotland and the southern parts of Scandinavia. The word is also curious from its bearing upon the discovery of America by the ancients, vide Fb. i. c. This sense (half-past three) is now obsolete in Icel., but eykt is in freq. use in the sense of triborium, a time of three hours; whereas in the oldest Sagas no passage has been found bearing this sense,—the Bs. i. 385, 446, and Hem. i. c. are of the 13th and 14th centuries. In Norway ykt is freq. used metaph. of all the four meal times in the day, morning-ykt, midday-ykt, afternoon-ykt (or ykt proper), and even-ykt. In old MSS. (Grág., K. p. K., Hem., Heid. S.) this word is always spelt eykd or eykþ, shewing the root to be 'auk' with the fem. inflex. added; it probably first meant the est-meal, answering to Engl. lunch, and thence came to mean the time of day at which this meal was taken. The eccl. law dilates upon the word, as the Sabbath was to begin at 'hora nona'; hence the phrase, eykt-helgr dagr (vide below). The word can have no relation to átta, eight, or átt, plaga coeli. At present Icel. say, at eykta-mótum, adv. at great intervals, once an eykt, once in three hours.

I. half-past three; þá er eykd er útsuðr-átt er deild í þriðjunga, ok hefir sól gengna tvá hluti en einn ögenginn, K. p. K. 92; net skal öll upp taka fyrir eykd, 90; helgan dag eptir eykd, 88; ef þeir hafa unnið á eykd, 94; enda skal hann undan honum hafa boðit fyrir útsuðjan dag en hinn skal hafa kosit at eykþ. A. i. c. it is wrongly explained as denoting the shortest day nine hours long, instead of seven; it follows that the latitude fixed by the editors of A. A. is too far to the south; frá jafnuðagri er haust til þess er sól setzk í eykðarstað, þá er vetr til jafnuðagris, Edda 103. eykðar-tíð, n. the hour of eykd, = Lat. nona, Hom. (St.) i. c.

iv. 20, to fold or close the book; A.S. fealdan; Engl. to fold; Germ. fallen; Dan. foldes; Swed. fälla; Fr. fauder; cp. Lat. plicare]:—to fold, with acc.:

[A.S. feald; Engl. fold; Germ. falte; O.H.G. fald; Dan. fold; Ital. falda, and faldetta (in Malta); Fr. faucette and faudage]:—a fold, of a garment, Str. 9, 13, l. 19, 21, where it is even spelt foldr; in Icel. hardly ever used in this sense. β. the bend of a garment; hún gekk á bak til ok snart fald hans klæða, Luke viii. 44; og fald sinna klæða stækka þeir, Matth. xxiii. 5; og báðu hann, að þeir mætti snerta að eins fald hans fata, Mark vi. 56; kyrtill hláðbúinn í fald niðr, a kirtle laced down to the bema, Fms. iv. 337; allt í fald niðr, Mag. (Fr.) 63; klæða-faldr, Pass. 36. 9. II. a white linen hood, the stately national head-gear worn by ladies in Icel., of which drawings are given by Eggert Itin. pp. 24, 27, Sir Joseph Banks in Hooker's Travels, the account of the French expedition of the year 1836 sq., and in almost all books of travels in Iceland. In old Sagas or poems the fald is chiefly recorded in Ld. ch. 33 (the dreams of Guðrún Ósvífs datter), cp. Sd. ch. 25; in the Orkn. S. ch. 58 the two sisters Frakök and Helga, daughters of the Gaelic Moddan, wore a fald (þá hnyktu þar af sér faldinum, ok reyttu sik), 182. In the Rm. (a poem probably composed in the Western Isles, Orkneys) all the three women, Edda, Amma, and Móðir, wore the fald; the words in þkv. 16, 19—ok haglega um höfuð typpum, and let us cleverly put a topping on his head, of Thor in bridal disguise—seem to refer to the fald. Bishop Bjarni, a native of the Orkneys (died A.D. 1232), gives the name of 'fald' to the helmet; Kormak, in the 10th century, speaks of the 'old falda.' In Normandy and Brittany a kind of 'fald' is still in use; it may be that it came to Icel. through Great Britain, and is of Breton origin; a French fald (Franseiskr, i.e. Britain?) is mentioned, D.N. iv. 359. In Icel. the fald was, up to the end of the last century, worn by every lady.—áðr sérhver fald bar frú | falleg þótti venja sú, a ditty. The ladies tried to outdo each other in wearing a tall fald; keisti faldr, the fald rose high, Rm. 26; falda hátt, Eb. (the verse); hence the sarcastic name stiku-faldr, a 'yard-long fald'; stífan teygja stiku-fald, þagnarmál 53, a poem of 1728; 1 Tim. ii. 9 is in the Icel. version rendered, eigi með foldum (αλγίστα) eðr gulli eðr perlum,—since with ancient women, and in Icel. up to a late time, braiding of the hair was almost unknown. In mod. poetry, Iceland with her glaciers is represented as a woman with her fald on; minn hefir faldr fengid fjúka-ryk og kám, Eggert: the sails are called faldar mastra, hoods of the masts, faldar mastra blöktu stílt, Úlf. 3, 14; bestar hlés hvíta skóku falda trés, id., 10; faldr skjýja, the folds of the clouds, poet., Núm. i. 11; faldr af degi, of the daybreak, 4, 86; vide krók-faldr, sveigir, a crooked fald. falda-feykir, m. a magical dance in which the falds flew off the ladies' heads, Fas. iii; cp. Percy's Fryar and Boy, also the Wonderful Flute in Popular Tales.

Fal-hófnir, m. barrel-hoof, hollow-hoof, a mythol. horse, Edda.

FEIGR, adj., [this interesting word still remains in the Dutch a veeg man and in the Scot. fey; cp. A. S. fæge, early Germ. veige; in mod. Germ. feig, but in an altered sense, viz. coward, craven, whence mod. Dan. feig]:—in popular language a man is said to be 'fey' when he acts in an unusual or strange manner, as when a miser suddenly becomes open-handed, Icel. say, eg held hann sá feigr, I hold that he is 'fey'; cp. feigð; or when a man acts as if blinded or spell-bound as to what is to come, and cannot see what all other people see, as is noticed by Scott in a note to the Pirate, ch. 5; again, the Scottish notion of wild spirits as foreboding death is almost strange to the Icel., but seems to occur now and then in old poetry, viz. mad, frantic, evil; svá ferr hann sem f. maðr, he fares, goes on like a 'fey' (mad) man, Fagrsk. 47 (in a verse); alfeig augu—the eyes as of a 'fey' man, Eg. (in a verse); feigr (mad, frantic) and framliðinn (dead) are opposed, Skm. 12; feikna fæðir, hygg ek at feigr séir, breiðir of evil, I ween thou art 'fey', Skv. 3. 31, and perhaps in Vsp. 33, where the words feigr menn evidently mean evil men, inmates of hell; cp. also Hbl. 12, where feigr seems to mean mad, frantic, out of one's mind:—cp. Scott's striking picture of Kennedy in Guy Mannering.

fé-lagi, a, m. [E. Engl. fellow, vide félag]; —prop. a 'fee-layer', i. e. a partner, shareholder of any kind, esp. in trade, Fbr. 74 new Ed., cp. konungs-félagi, a king's partner, for the kings of old carried on trade, Fbr., Fb. iii. l. c.; sailors who had food in common were félagar; the law provides that even a poor man, if he contributes all that he has, is a lawful félagi, Grág. ii. 72; enda á hann hvárki félaga né mötu-maut, er einn í mötu-neyti ok á engan félaga, 73, passim in the Grág.; félagar-erfð, f. a partner's inheritance, N. Germ. ch. 17—'tegumen omnibus sagum, fibulá, aut, si desit, spiná consertum'; the cloaks were often made of (or lined with) costly furs, Glúm. ch. 6; breiða feld á höfuð sér, to wrap the head in a cloak, Nj. 164, Kristni S. ch. 11, Fms. vi. 43 (Sighvat), as a token of deep thinking; feldar-dálkr, m. a cloak-pin, Hkr., vide dálkr; feldar-röggvar, f. pl. the patches or 'ragged' hairs on the outside of a cloak, Lv. 55, cp. The etymology of feldr is uncertain, scarcely from Lat. pellis, but rather from falda, to fold, wrap; even Tacitus, l. c., makes a distinction between the 'sagulum' (= feldr) and 'ferarum pelles,' the latter being a mark of more savage habits, such as that of the berserkers; feldr is never used of a woman's cloak (möttull, skikkja); the passage Fm. 43 is corrupt: the phrase, það er ekki með feldi, it is not right, something is wrong, is a corrupt form instead of með feldu, part. from fella, q. v.

FÍMT or fímmt, f. a number of five: fímtar-tala, u, f. a set of five or multiple of five (as fifteen, fifty, etc.), Bs. i. 190. 2. [Swed. femt = a kind of court], a law phrase, a summoning before a court with a notice of five days: a standing phrase in the Norse law, so that the verb fímta means to summon: so, fímtar-gríð, n. pl. a truce during a fímt, N. G. L. i. 342, 351; fímmtar-nafn, n. a citation with a fímt's notice, K. A. 184; the phrase gera e-m fímt simply means to summon, N. G. L. i. 346, passim; one fímt is the shortest notice for summoning, five fímtes the longest,—fímm fímtum hit lengsta, ef hann veit nær þing skal vera, 21;—the law provides that no summoning shall take place on Tuesday, because in that case the court-day would fall on Sunday, the day of summoning not being counted, N. G. L., Jb., and K. A. passim.—This law term is very curious, and seems to be a remnant of the old heathen division of time into fímtes (pentads), each month consisting of six such weeks; the old heathen year would then have consisted of seventy-two fímtes, a holy number, as composed of 2 × 36 and 6 × 12. With the introduction of the names of the planetary days (vide dagr) and the Christian week, the old fímt only remained in law and common sayings; thus in Hm. 73,—'there are many turns of the weather in five days (viz. a fímt), but more in a month,' which would be unintelligible unless we bear in mind that a fímt just answered to our week; or verse 50,—'among bad friends love flames high for five days, but is slaked when the sixth comes;' in a few cases, esp. in ecclesiastical law, sjaund (hebdomad) is substituted for the older fímt, N. G. L. passim; it is curious that in Icel. law (Grág.) the fímt scarcely occurs, as in Icel. the modern week seems to have superseded the old at an early time. COMPOD:

Fímtar-dómr, m. the Fifth High Court in the Icel. Commonwealth, vide dómr, Grág. p. þ., etc.; the form of the word is irregular, as it means the Fifth Court (added to the four Quarter Courts) = dómr hinn fímmti, as it is also called in Grág. p. þ. ch. 24 sqq.; the old Scand. law term fímt seems to have floated before the mind of the founders, as fímtar-dómr etymologically answers to Swed. femt, i. e. a court before which one has to appear a 'fímt' from the citation. Fímtardóms-eiðr, m. the oath to be taken in the Fifth Court, Grág. p. þ. ch. 26, 27, Nj. 241; in Sturl. ii. 128 used of an oath worded as the oath in the Fifth Court. FINGER, m., gen. fingrar, mod. fingers; dat. fingri; pl. fingr; a neut. fingr occurs in O. H. L. 73, 74, which gender is still found in Swed. dialects; the acc. pl. is in conversation used as fem., an Icel. says allar fingr, not alla fingr; [Goth. fingrs; A. S. finger, etc.; whereas Lat. digitus and Gr. δάκτυλος etymologically answer to Icel. tá, Engl. toe, Germ. zehe, a finger of the foot];—a finger, Grág. i. 498, Hkr. ii. 380, 384, Magn. 518, passim; the names of the fingers—þumal-fingr, the thumb; vísi-f., the index finger, also called sleiki-f., lick-finger; langa-töng, long-prong; græði-f., leech-finger, also, but rarely, called baug-f., digitus annuli; litli-f., the little finger. In the Norse law (N. G. L. i. 172) the fingers are taxed, from the thumb at twelve ounces, to the little finger at one ounce—not so in the curious lawsuit recorded in Sturl. i. ch. 18–27. Also a measure, a finger's breadth, Nj. 27, cp. MS. 732. 5: arithm. any number under ten, Alg. 362; botan., skolla-fingr, a kind of fern, lycopodium. fingra-járn, n. a 'finger-iron', a thimble (?), Dipl. v. 18. fingr-hæð, f. a finger's height, as measure.

II. metaph., 1. to find, perceive, notice, feel; þú fannst at ek lauss lífi, Fm. 8; Gunnhildr finnr þat, Nj. 9; fundu þeir þá brátt, at þangat var skotið öllum málum, Eb. 330; hitki hann fídr þótt þeir um hann fár lesi, Hm. 23; þá þat finnr er at þingi kemr, 24, 63; þeir fundu eigi fyrr en sjölmenni dreif at þeim, Fms. i. 136, Nj. 79. 2. impers., fann þat á, it could be perceived, Eg. 51; fann þó mjök á Dofra, er þeir skildu, i. e. D. felt much at their parting, Fms. x. 175; fann lítt á honum, hvárt honum þótti vel eðr illa, it was little to be seen, weibster... Eb. 42. 3. finna til, to feel hurt, feel a sore pang, is a freq. mod. phrase, but rarely occurs in old writers; finnr þú nokkurt til hvert sjúndskapr, etc., Anal. 175; en Aldrian fann ekki til þessa sjálf, áðr einn riddari tók brandinn af honum, Þidr. 358; hence til-finning, feeling. 4. to find, bring forward; finna e-t til, in support of a charge; ok finna þat til foráttu, at..., Nj. 15; hvat finnr þú helzt til þess, how dost thou make that out? 49; hann fann þó þat til, at..., Fms. vii. 258; Eyólfir fann þat til, at..., Nj. 244; hvat finnr þú til þess, what givest thou as the reason? Eb. 184; finna e-t við, to make objection to; hvártz hiinn fídr við, at hann sé eigi þar í þingi, Grág. i. 22; þá fundu þeir þat við, um gjaforð þetta, Fms. x. 87, v. l. 3. as a law phrase, to find money, to pay, lay out; hann skal eigi finna meira af fó því, en kaupar leg, Grág. i. 207; allra aura þeirra er úmaginn skal finna með sér, 206; ok slika aura f. honum, ii. 210; á hann enga heimtúng til þess er hann fann við, Jb. 421 (MS.); ef maðr selt úmaga til framfarslu ok finnr fé með, Grág. i. 266; þeim þræli er hann hefir fulla verðaura fyrir fundit, 358; hence in the old oath, ek hefka fé bōðit í dóm þenna, hefka ek fundit, ok monka finna, hvárki til laga né úlaga (where bjōða and finna are opposed, i. e. bjōða to offer, finna to pay actually), 75; hence is derived the law phrase, at finna sjálfan sik fyrir, to pay with one's self, according to the law maxim, that 'he that cannot pay with his purse shall pay with his body,' used metaph. to pay dear, to feel sorely; kvæð makligt at hann fyndi sik fyrir, Sturl. iii. 213, Eb. 154; skaltu sjálfan þik fyrir finna, Fms. iii. 110, xi. 256, Þorst. Síðu II. 9; the pun in Anal. 177 is a mere play of words. 4. finna at e-u, to censure, Fbr. 212, Edda (pref.), very freq. in mod. usage, hence að-finnsla and að-fyndni, censure; nearly akin is the phrase, þat eitt finn ek Gunnlaugi, at mér þykir hann vera úráðinn, that is the only fault I find with Gunnlaug, Isl. ii. 217; ef nokkut væri þat er at mætti finna, if there was anything to blame, Sks. 69 new Ed. FJÖR, n., dat. fjörvi, mod. fjöri, [Ulf. renders κόσμος by fairnes; A. S. feorþ, pl. feoru = life; Hel. frab; obsolete in Engl., Germ., Swed., and Dan.]:—life, Vsp. 33; með fjörvi, 623. 49; esp. freq. in allit. phrases, eiga sótum fjör at launa; fjör ok fé, Fms. iv. 77, Grág. ii. 21, Sl. i; frekr er hver til fjörins, Þorst. St. 54, Nj. 124; allt er fjörvi firt, Ld. 266. 2. in poetry it seems to be used of the vital parts, the body; fleinn hitti fjör, Höfuðl. 9, Hm. 7, Vellekla Hkr. i. 175, Gh. 18, Skm. 20; cp. Germ. leib, leben, and the Goth. and A. S. sense of this word. 3. in mod. usage freq. in the sense of vitality, vigour, energy, spirits; thus, fjör-sákr, m., vide fiskr: fjör-kálfr, m. one bounding with life as a young calf, hann er mesti fjörkálfr; vera með fullu fjör, to be in the full vigour of life: fjör-lauss, adj. life-less, listless: fjör-maðr, m. a vigorous man: fjör-mikill, adj. full of life.

II. in poetry fjör is used in a great many compds, chiefly those denoting loss of life, death, e. g. fjör-bann, -grand, -lag, -lát, -lot, -námi, -rán, -spell, -tál: the heart is fjör-negi, a, m. the 'life-cord', Fm. 32. fjör-baugr, m. 'life-money', a law term, a fee amounting to a mark, to be paid by a convict of the lesser degree to the executive court (fjárns-dómr); and if this was not paid, the convict was henceforth a full outlaw:—hence the convict is called fjörbaugs-maðr and the lesser outlawry or conviction fjörbaugs-garðr, m., because within a fixed space (garðr), the convict was safe, having paid the life-money, vide esp. Grág. þ. þ. ch. 32 sqq., ch. 40, Nj. 240, and the Sagas and laws passim. In two passages, viz. Flám. S. ch. 10 and Glúma ch. 24, fjörbaugs-garðr is used in the same sense as þing-helgi, q. v., viz. of the sacred boundary of a meeting, regarded by the heathens as a sanctuary, cp. Eb. ch. 4 fine. in the Edit. of Flám. S. the passage 'til Lóns' is false, the probable reading being 'til Lopz', i. e. Lopts; in the old MS. Vatnsþýrna the shank of the p was prob. obliterated so as to make it look like n, and so one transcriber read 'Lóns,' another 'Jóns;' the reading 'Lopts' is born out by the historical context, cp. also Landn. 5, ch. 8; the word fjörbaugs is diffusely commented on in H. E. i. 137 sqq. compds: fjörbaugs-sekt, f. penalty of f., = fjörbaugs-garðr, Grág. þ. þ. ch. 40. fjörbaugs-sök, f. a case liable to fjörbaugs, Eg. 723, Nj. 164, Grág. i. 90.

FJÖRÐ or fjörð, adv. [early Germ. fert, used by Luther, but obsolete in mod. Germ.; Swed. and Dan. fjord; cp. Sansk. parus]:—the past year; in Icel. this word is obsolete, and scarcely ever occurs in old prose writers; but the mod. 'í fyrra' is derived or corrupted from an older phrase 'í fjörð,' which is still used all over the Scand. continent; in D. N. 'í fjörð' repeatedly occurs, cp. Fr.; the 'fjörð' in the following passages—Hkr. i. 186, Fms. ii. 328, vi. 88, Fs. 95 (Hallfred), all of them poems of the 10th and 11th centuries—is doubtless to be taken in this sense; and the explanation given in Lex. Poët., s. v. fjörð and following, cannot be right.

E. and Scot. firth, firth; Engl. ford is a kindred word, but not identical]:—a firth, bay, a Scand. word; but a small crescent-formed inlet or creek is called vík, and is less than fjörðr, hence the saying, fjörðr milli frænda, en vík milli vina, let there be a firth between kinsmen, but a creek between friends, denoting that kinship is not always so trustworthy as friendship: the allit. phrase, fjall ok fjörðr, vide fjall; freq. in Icel. and Scand. local names combined with some other word expressing the shape, etc., Breiði-f., Mjófi-f., Djúpi-f., Grunni-f., Eyja-f., Lima-f. or Eylima-f., Arnar-f., Alpta-f., Vain-f., etc. In Icel. and old Scand. countries the shore districts are freq. divided into counties, bearing the name of the firth, just as the inland is divided into dales; thus Eyja-f. and Skaga-f. denote both the firth and the county bordering on the firth. The western and eastern parts of Icel. are called Vest-firðir and Aust-firðir; in Norway a county is called Firðir; cp. Rb. 324 sqq., where over a hundred names of Icel. fjords are recorded, Landn. (Index), and the Sagas: fjarða-gol, n. a breeze blowing off a fjord, Fær. 203, Fms. iv. 302; fjarðar-botn, m. the bottom or head of a fjord, Eb. 188; fjarðar-horn, n. the creek at the head of a fjord, Gisl. 55, also freq. as a local name; fjarðar-las, m. fjord-ice, Eb. 242, Bs. i. 327; fjarðar-kljöp or fjarðar-minni, n. the mouth (opening) of a fjord, Sturl. i. 121, Hkr. iii. 118; fjarðar-menn, m. pl. the inhabitants of a fjord county, Sturl. ii. 199.

FORÞS, mod. foss, m., prob. akin to the preceding word and forr, [Swed.-Dan. foss; North. E. force; a test word of Scandian. language and origin; cp. the curious passage in Constant. Porph. De Admin. Imperil, ch. 9, where the Byzantine author gives some names of waterfalls in Russia in two languages, ρωσιον and σκαβιονον (Russian and Slavonic), with a Greek translation; ρωσιον, a waterfall, being called Βορσ or Φόρος (s. g. οὐλ-Βορσ = Icel. Hólm-fors, Βορσ-Φόρος = Icel. Báru-fors), whereas σκαβιονον it is called παρ, i. e. porog or prag: Constantine in another passage states that the Russians were Teutonic or 'Franks': the Gardar (Russia Minor) of that time was in fact a Scandian. country; even the name Russia is by some (P. A. Munch) explained as Scandian, afterwards adopted for the whole empire; it was still regarded so by the Byzantine authors of the 10th century, as opposed to Slavonic]:—a 'force,' waterfall, Landn. 291, 292; fors mikill er Sarpur heitir, Ó. Judges iv. 13; hann gripi einn stein upp ór forsinum, 227; Davíð tók fimmm steina ór einum forsi, 464. 1 Sam. xvii. 40; við forsinn Besor, 490. 1 Sam. xxx. 9; yfir fors Cedron, 527. 2 Sam. xv. 23; af forsi drakk hann á götu, 656 C. 2: in the old poem Vsp. fors is evidently used in the same sense; á sér hón ausask augum forsi, 31; falla forsar, 58. This idiom perhaps gives a hint as to the native place of this poem; falla forsum, to fall in torrents, Fas. ii. (in a verse). forþs-fall, n. a 'force-fall,' torrent, Stj. 32, Ó. for-vara, ad. [Germ. verwahren], to keep, Matth. xvi. 25.

FORVE, n. an æy, in the eccl. law of the county Vikin or Bosgaping, a coast district in the south of Norway, N. G. L. i. 339, 363, where the law orders that a monster child (i. e. an abortion, a birth without human shape) shall be brought to a place 'forve,' and buried where neither man nor beast comes by; þat skal á forve (forre, v. l.) fara ok röyra (put in a cairn) þar er hvárki gengr yfir menn né fénadr, þar er forve (forfue, v. l.) hins illa. In N. G. L. i. 13 it is ordered that felons (e. g. traitors, murderers, self-murderers, etc.) were not to be buried in consecrated soil, but in the 'flood-mark where sea and green turf meet'; cp. the curious story in Landn. 2. 19, where the Christian lady Auð ordered herself to be buried between high and low water mark (i. e. forve), as she would not rest in heathen earth; so, on the other hand, a monster child must not rest in Christian earth. Thus forve is probably derived from fyrva, q. v., to ebb, and denotes the flood-mark or beach in which the grave was to be dug; the concluding words, þat er forve hins illa, probably mean this place is the forve of the evil one, i. e. an unblessed place. The etymology given in H. E. i. 75 cannot be right.

FRAKKA, u. f. [A. S. franca], a kind of spear; Grimm thinks that the franka of Tacitus is merely a corruption of franca, a suggestion which seems to be almost certain; in northern poems and writers this word only occurs in Rm. 32, whence it was probably taken into Edda (Gl.); on the other hand, we have an Icel. frakki, a, m. a kind of weapon, in the compd hræ-f., a 'carriage-fluke,' i. e. the blade of a sword, Glsl. 7 (in a verse); and akkoris-frakki, a, m. an 'anchor-fluke (?)', in a verse of 996, Fs. 92; again, the frakka of the Rm. was probably borrowed from A. S.

Frakki, a, m. a proper name, cp. Gullp.; Frakka-nei, n. a farm.

Frakkar, m. pl. the Franks, mod. the French; perhaps derived from the national weapon franca, as that of Saxons from seax, sax = gladius; Frakkland, n. the land of the Franks, as fixed by the peace of Verdun in 843, lb. ch. 9 and Fms. i. ii, and in old poets (Hallfred):—in mod. language used for France.

frakki, a, m. [Fr. fraque], a frock, coat, mod. word, borrowed from Dan. frak.

frakkr, adj. [Engl. and Germ. frank], this word never occurs in old writers, and in mod. usage only in the sense impertinent, intrusive.

FRAM, adv.—the Icel. has a triple adverbial form, fram, denoting the going to a place (ad locum); frammi, the being in a place (in loco); framan, the going from a place (a loco)—compar. framarr (mod. framarr) or fremr, = Goth. framis; superl. framast (framarr) or fremst: pronounced with a double m = frammm; and that such was the case in olden times may be seen from Fms. vi. 385 and Skálda 168, 171. This adv. with its compds and derivatives may be said to have been lost in Germ. as well as Engl., and at a very early time. Even Ulf. uses fram as a prep. in the sense of dró, like the A. S. and Engl. from, Swed. från: only in two passages Ulf. uses fram as adv., viz. Rom. xiii. 12, where he renders 'the night is far spent' (nóttin er um liðin of the Icel. N. T.) by framis galeiþan, which recalls to mind the Icel. fram-liðinn = deceased, past; and Mark i. 19, where þvoþalveir is rendered by gaggan framis = Icel. ganga framarr or ganga fram; cp. also the Goth. compds fram-gabts = progress, Philipp. i. 25; fram-aldrs = stricken in years; fram-vigis = Icel. fram-vegis; fram-vairþis = further: in O. H. G. fram = ultra still occurs, but is now lost in Germ. as well as in Engl.: the Icel., on the other hand, makes a clear distinction between the prep. frá (from) and fram, on, forward, = Gr. ὑπόω, Lat. porro, pro; in some compds the sense from appears, e. g. framandi, a stranger, = Ulf. framapeis, prop. one who is far off or from far off; so also fram-liðinn, gone, past; ganga fram, to die.

B. frammi, (for the pronunciation with a double m vide Skálda 169.) denotes in or on a place, without motion, and is formed in the same way as uppi from upp, níðri from níðr; Icel. thus say, ganga fram, níðr, upp, to go on, go down, go up; but vera frammi, níðri, uppi, to be in, etc.; if followed by a vowel, the final i may be dropped, thus, vera frammi á dal, or frammi á dal, Hrafn. 6; sitja frammi fyrir háseti (= frammi fyrir), Ó. FRÓÐR, adj. [Ulf. fróþs = φρόνιμος, σοφός, σώφρων, σωτός; Hel. fród; A. S. fród] = knowing, learned, well-instructed; fróðr, er marg-kunnigr er, Fms. xi. 413; hún var fróð at mörgu, Nj. 194; þat er sögn fróðra manna, Ísl. ii. 206; verða fróðari um e-t, Sks. 37; at Finnunum tveim er hér eru fróðastir (greatest wizards), Fms. i. 8; fúrr er fróðum vant, little is lacking to the knowing, cp. the Engl. 'knowledge is power,' Hm. 107: of books, containing much information, instructive, bækr bestar ok fróðastar, Bs. i. 429. β. in some passages in Hm. fróðr seems to mean clever, Hm. 7, 27, 30, 61, 107; þá nam ek at frævas ok fróðr vera, 142; fróðir menn, knowing men, Yt. 6; fróð regin, the wise powers, Vpm. 26; enn fróði jötunn, 30, 33, 35—in some few poet. comps (in which it seems to be used almost = prúðr, brave, valiant, as bōð-f., eljuf-f.) the true meaning is skilled in war (cp. the Gr. δαλφωρ); sann-f., truly informed; óljúgróðr, Íb. 4; ú-fróðr, ignorant, = Goth. unfrōps, which Ulf. uses to translate δαλφωρ, δαλφωτος; sögu-fróðr, skilled in old lore. As fróðr chiefly refers to historical knowledge, 'hinn Fróði' was an appellation given to the old Icel. chroniclers—Ari Fróði, Brandr Fróði, Sæmundr Fróði, Kolskeggr Fróði, who lived between 1050 and 1150 A. D. But the historians of the next age were seldom called by this name: Odd Munk (of the end of the 12th century) is only once called so, (Ing. S. fine); Snorri (of the 13th) twice, viz. Ann. 1241 in a single MS., and Sturl. iii. 98, but in a part of the Saga probably not written by Sturla himself; Sturla (who died in 1284) is never called by that name; and the only real exception is Styrmir 'Fróði' (who died in 1245), though he least deserved the name. Of foreign writers the Icel. gave the name Fróði to Bede (Landn. pref.), whom they held in great honour.

FRÓMR, adj., akin to framr, prob. borrowed from Germ. fromm, Low Germ. from; it seems to have come to Icel. with the Hanseatic trade at the end of the 15th century, and is found in the Rímur of that time, e. g. Skáld-Helga R. 3. 22; from Luther's Bible and the Reformation it became more freq. in the sense of righteous, pious, with the notion of guileless, from-og meinlaus, and often occurs in the N. T. and hymns, e. g. Pass. 22. 2, 24. 9: it has however not been truly naturalized, except in the sense of honest, i. e. not thievish, and ófrómr, dishonest, thievish, (a euphemism); emtala-f., not slandering, speaking fair of other people. COMPS: fróm-leiki, a, m. guilelessness, Pass. 16. 8. fróm-lyndi, f. id.

FRÓN, n. a poet. word = land, country, Lex. Poët. passim; scarcely akin to the Germ. fröh = demesne: in mod. poets and in patriotic songs frón is the pet name for Icel. itself, Núm. i. 10, 8. 9, 12. 4, Snót 16: Icel. students in Copenhagen about 1763 were the first who used the word in this sense.

frums (= frum-) exists in a few comps: frumsar-brauð, n. bread of the first-fruits, Stj. 615. 2 Kings iv. 43: frums- or frumsa- is in Icel. and in Norse popular tales esp. used of animals that are first-born through two or more generations; such animals are thought to have a wonder-power, cp. Ivar Asasen; hence frumsa-kálfur, m. a 'frumsa' calf; the word still represents the Gothic form frums, vide above. frumsa-frum (or frumsa-brum), n., botan. pollen, Björn. In Ísl. þjóða, i. 530, v. l., frumsa, n., is said to mean a lump on the forehead of new-born foals, Gr. ἰσχυρὰς, which was used as a love-spell, cp. Virg. Aeneid. iv. 515, 516.

frunti, a, m. [prob. from the Fr. effronté, cp. Scot. frunty], a rude, obtrusive boor; frunta-ligr, adj.; frunta-skapr, m.

FRÚ, f., an older nom. sing. frauva, u. f., occurs Fms. x. 421, (Ágrip); frouva, Stj. 47; frou, id.; frú is prop. a later contracted form from frouva; therefore the gen. in old writers is always frú (qs. frúva); and the word is in the sing. indecl., thus, frú-innar, Fms. ix. 292; hann fékk frú Cecilíu, x. 3; móðir frú Ingigerðar, Landn. 240; frú Kristínar, Fms. ix. 8; sliktar frou (sic) sem ek em, Str. 40, 47: in mod. usage gen. frúar, if used by itself or put after one's name, but indecl. if put before it in addressing any one, thus, Frú Kristínar, but Kristínar frúar; the gen. frúar occurs Fas. iii. 586, in a MS. of the 15th century: pl. frúir, but older form fruvur or frouvur, e. g. frouvur, Edda (Arna-Magn.) i. 96 (Kb.); but Ob. frúr, Hkr. i. 16: [feyja was origin. fem. of freyr, and prop. meant Lat. domina; Germ. frau; Dan. frue; no Goth. fraujō is found]:—a lady; in Icel. at present only used of the wives of men of rank or title, e. g. biskups-frú, amtmanns-frú; wives of priests are not called so: again, húsfreyja is more homely, Germ. hausfrau, Engl. housewife, always of a married woman, vide e. g. the þjóðálfr (Icel. newspaper): in the 14th century in Icel. frú was used of abbesses and wives of knights, but was little used before the 13th century: af hennar (the goddess Freyja) nafni skyldi kalla allar konur tignar (noble woman), svá sem nú heita fruvur, Hkr. i. c.; af hennar nafni er þat tignar-nafn er ríkis-konur (women of rank) eru kallaðar fruvur, Edda i. c.; Kolr hafði talat margt við frú cina ríka (of a foreign lady in Wales), Nj. 280: again, good housewives, such as Bergthora in Njála, are called húsfreyjur, but never frúir; thus, kemsk þó at seinna fari, húsfreyja, Nj. 69; gakk þú út, húsfreyja, þvát ek vil þik fyrir öngan mun inni brenna, 200; bíandi ok húsfreyja, Grág. i. 157; góð húsfreyja, Nj. 51; gild húsfreyja, Glúm. 349, Bs. i. 535:—the Virgin Mary is in legends called vár frú, our Lady; cp. jungfrú (pronounced jómsfrú).

FRYGÐ, f., and fryktr, m., Stj. 26, 56, 77, [an unclass. word formed from Lat. fructus], blossoming; fegð ok f., Stj. 14, 142; frygð ok feiti, 154; frygð ok ávotr, 15. frygðar-fullr and -samligr, adj. fruitful, Stj. 27.

II. in the Rímur of the 15th century frygð is used of love, Lat. amores, Skáld-H. 5. 38, passim; and frygdugr, adj. amorous, Skáld-H. It is a bad word and quite out of use, and seems to have no connection with Germ. freude, which is a good Teut. word; the mod. frukt, n. bumble compliments, and frukta, að, to make such compliments, in a bad sense, are perhaps akin, but they are slang words.

frýjan, f. = frýja, Fms. v. 55.

FRÝNN or frýnilligr, adj.; this word is never used but as compounded with the prefix ú- (except Fas. ii. 351 in a bad and late Saga), viz. ú-frýnn or ú-frýnilligr = frowning. The sense as well as the etymology of frýnn is somewhat dubious; there is the Germ. frön or frön or fran; but that word seems purely German and is by Grimm supposed to be qs. frō min = my lord (vide Hel.); neither does Icel. frýnn or Germ. frōn correspond properly as to the root vowel (cp. e. g. Germ. lobn = Icel. laun): on the other hand there is the Engl. frown, which in form answers to the simple frýnn, but in sense to the compd ú-frýnn; as no similar word is found in A. S. (nor in Germ. nor in Hel.), frown is most likely a Scand. word; and we suppose that the Icel. prefix syllable ú- is not in this instance = un-, that is to say, negative, but = of-, that is to say, intensive (= too, very, greatly); the original forms of frýnn, of-frýnnligr were contr. and assimilated into ófrýnn, ófrýnilligr, meaning very frowning, and these compds then superseded the primitive simple word; this is confirmed by the freq. spelling in MSS. with 'of-', e. g. ofrýnn, Ó. H. 144; all-ofrýnn, Eg. Cod. Wolph.; heldr ofrýnn, Ó. H. 167; but yet more freq. with 'ú-', e. g. Orkn. 440, Boll. 358, Fær. 50, Fms. i. 40, Fb. i. 73; the ckkí frýnn, Fas. l. c., is again a variation of úfrýnn; the statement by Björn that frýnn is = bland, affable, is a mere guess by inference from the compd.

FRÝSA, t. (hon frýsti ferliga, Sams. 9), mod. að, to snort, whinny, of a horse, Greg. 49, Karl. 3, 4, Fas. i. 60 (where better frýsa, q. v.); akin are frýssa, að, and frussa, to sport.

FRÆNDI, an irreg. part. of the obsolete frjá, pl. frændr, gen. frænda, dat. frændum, [Ulf. renders φίλος by frjondr; A. S. fræond; Engl. friend; Hel. friend; Ó. H. G. frjunt; Germ. freund; all of them meaning friend = Lat. amicus; whereas in the Scand. languages, Icel. as well as mod. Swed. and Dan., it is only used in a metaph. sense; Dan. frænde; Swed. fründe]; —a kinsman; not a single instance is on record of the word having ever been used in another sense, unless an exception be allowed in the allit. phrase, sem frændr en eigi sem fjáendr, in the old Grðamál, Grág. (Kb.) i. 170; —the same usage prevails in the oldest poems, e. g. Hm., —deyr fé, deyrja frændr, 75; sumr er af sonum sáll sumr af frændum, 68; and Dags frændr, the kinsmen (great grandsons) of Dag, Yt. 10. This change in the sense of the word is very curious and characteristic of the Scandinavians, with whom the bonds of kinship and brotherhood were strong, and each family formed a kind of confederacy or fellowship equally bound in rights and in duties; cp. such phrases as, frænd-bálkr, frænd-garðr: frændr often denotes kinsmen in a narrower sense = brethren; yet sons and frændr are distinguished in Hm. 68; but generally frændr is a collective word, Nj. 4; of a brother, Fs. 57; frændi, my son, Nj. 143, cp. FYRIR, prep., in the Editions spelt differently; in MSS. this word is usually abbreviated either f (i. e. firir), or f, fur, ivr (i. e. fyrir); in some MSS. it is idiomatically spelt with i, fir, e. g. Arna-Magn. 382 (Bs. i. 263 sqq.); and even in the old Miracle-book Arna-Magn. 645 (Bs. i. 333 sqq.), just as ifr is written for yfir (over); in a few MSS. it is written as a monosyllable fyr, e. g. D. I. i. 475. Mork. passim; in Kb. (Sæm-Edda) occurs fyr telia, Vsp. I; fyr nordan, 36; fyr dýrum, Gm. 22; fyr vestan ver, Hkv. 2. 8; in other places as a dissyll. fyrir, e. g. Hm. 56, Gm. 54. Skm. 34, Ls. 15, Am. 64, Hkv. 2. 2, 19 (quoted from Bugge's edition, see his preface, p. xvi); fyr and fyrir stand to one another in the same relation as ept to eptir, and to undir, of (super) to yfir: this monosyllabic form is obsolete, save in the compds, where 'for-' is more common than 'fyrir-'; in some cases both forms are used, e. g. for-dæming and fyrir-dæming; in others only one, but without any fixed rule: again, the forms fyr, fyrre, or fire, which are often used in Edd., are just as wrong, as if one were to say epti, undi, yfi; yet this spelling is found now and then in MSS., as, fyrre, Ó. H. (facsimile); fire, Grág. Sb. ii. 288 (also facsimile): the particles i and a are sometimes added, i fur, Fms. iv. 137; i fyrir, passim; a fur, Haurst. 1. [Ulf. faur and faura; A. S. fore and for; Engl. for and fore; Germ. für and vor; Dan. for; Swed. för; Gr. πο-, πρό-; Lat. pro, prae.]

II. (cp. fyrir, acc., C. IX), in a neg. or priv. sense; a few words occur even in the earliest poems, laws, and writers, e. g. for-að, -átta, -dæða, -nám, -næmi, -sending, -sköp, -verk, -veðja, -viða, -vitni, -yoja, -yrtri; those words at least seem to be original and vernacular; at a later time more words of the same kind crept in:

1. as early as writers of the 13th and 14th centuries, e. g. for-boð, -bætur, -djarfa, -dæma (fyrir-dæma), -taka (fyrir-taka), -þóttir; fyrir-bjóða, -fara, -gora, -koma, -kunna, -lita, -muna, -mæla, -vega, -verða.

2. introduced in some words at the time of the Reformation through Luther's Bible and German hymns, and still later in many more through Danish, e. g. for-brjóta, -drita, -láta, -líkast, -merkja, -nema, -sorga, -sóma, -standa, -svara, -þénusta, and several others; many of these, however, are not truly naturalised, being chiefly used in eccl. writings:—it is curious that if the pronoun be placed after the verb (which is the vernacular use in Icel.) the sense is in many cases reversed; thus, fyrir-koma, to destroy, but koma e-u fyrir can only mean to arrange; so also fyrir-mæla, to curse, and mæla fyrir, to speak for; for-bætur, but biðja fyrir e-m, etc.; in the latter case the sense is good and positive, in the former bad and negative; this seems to prove clearly that these compds are due to foreign influence.

G

G (gé) is the seventh letter. In the old Gothic Runic alphabet (Golden horn) it is represented by X, which was probably taken from the Greek X. The later common Runic alphabet had no g, and made the tenuis k (ƿ, called Kaun) serve for both; still later, g was distinguished simply by a dot or stroke, ƿ̇ or ƿ̈, and this character was called 'Stunginn Kaun,' i. e. dotted or cut Kaun, just as the name of Stunginn Týr was given to cut or dotted t.

A. In Scandinavia the letter g begins many fewer words than in German or Saxon, mainly because the prefixed particle ge- is absent. In the fragments of Ulf., although so little is left, ga- is prefixed to about three hundred words, mostly verbs and nouns; in the Anglo-Saxon at least three or four thousand such words are recorded, and in modern German still more; indeed the number is so to say endless, as it can be put to almost any verb. In Icel. the only traces of this prefix are, I. in a few words retaining g before the liquids l and n (gl and gn): a. gl in the word glikr, similis (and derivatives); glikr is now obsolete, and even in very old MSS. of the 13th or even the 12th century both forms, glikr and likr, glikendi and likendi, glikjast and likjast, occur indiscriminately; but in older poems gl is the only form. β. gn in gnadd, gnaga, gnauda, gnegg, gneisti, gnipa, gnista, gnolla, gnógr, gnúa, gnúpr, gnýdr, gnæðingr, gnóllra, gnótra (q. v.), and some poet. words, as gnat, etc. But in mod. usage, in gn and gl, the g is dropped both in spelling and pronunciation, nadd, naga, nauda, negg, neisti, nipa . . . núpr, nyðr or níðr, næðingr, nóllra, notra; the gn in these words is almost constantly used in very old MSS., but even at the end of the 13th and in the 14th century the MSS., e. g. Hb., begin to drop the g, vide p. 206 sqq.: the exceptions are few, e. g. Icel. never say nyja for gnýja, but the word itself, although known, is almost obsolete; so also in modern writers gnóti and gnætir (abundance) often occur; but the sound gn may be said to be almost extinct. The Danes, Swedes, and Norse still keep the g before n, e. g. Dan. gnave, Swed. gnaga; whereas in glikr the g has been dropped, and the word has become in Swed. lik, etc.; in Dan. lig, lige, ligning, etc. II. in two Icel. words the prefixed g has hardened into a radical consonant, so that its proper sound is no longer perceived, viz. granni (and compds), a neighbour, prop. one of the next house, Goth. garazna = γάρων, qs. g-ranni, from rann, domus; and greida, explicare, = Goth. garaidian. The Scandinavian tongues have furthermore done away with the Saxon and German prefix to passive participles, and no trace of them remains even in the earliest writers or poems. The modern English has followed the same law as the Scandinavian in gn, for though it still appears in Engl. words (as gnave, gnash), it is hardly sounded. The participial prefix remained long in southern England (see Morris's Specimens), but weakened into y or i till at last it dropped altogether.

B. PRONUNCIATION.—It is sounded hard, soft, or aspirate; hard, as in Engl. gate, gold; soft, as in Swed. dag, Germ. tag, or mod. Gr. γ, but lost in Engl.; aspirate also lost in Engl. I. hard, 1. as initial before a hard vowel, garðr, gull, gott, etc.; and before a consonant, gláðr, gráta; but the prefixed g, in the instances A. I. above, was prob. always sounded soft. 2. as final after consonants, as sorg, belg, ung, höfgr, or if double, as in egg.

II. soft, never as initial (unlike mod. Greek, in which γ is sounded soft throughout), but only as final or sometimes as medial:

1. if single after a vowel, as dag, hug, log, veg, stig. 2. between two vowels if the latter is hard, lega, ligum, vega, vegum, dögum; but in case both the vowels, or even only the last, are soft (an i vowel) the g sound is lost, and it is eliminated altogether or assimilated to the preceding vowel, which thus becomes a diphthong; the same is the case if j follows g; thus syllables and words such as bagi and bei, dagi and dæi, dægi and deigi, cygja and eyja or eya, lagi and lægi or læi are all sounded alike; in olden times there must have been a difference of sound, as old MSS. never confound the spelling in words like those above, whereas in modern letters written by uneducated people, nothing is more frequent than to see, um dæinn for um daginn, or á deinnum for á deginum, and the like; the poets also rhyme accordingly, e. g. segi—hneigi, Pass. 38. 13; segja—deyja, 25; segja—beygja, 25. 12; drygja—nyja, 30. 3; eigið—dregið, 7. 10; deyja—teygja, 16. 13, etc.; even MSS. of the end of the 15th century frequently give seigja for segja (to say), e. g. Arna-Magn. 556 A, see the pref. to Isl. ii. p. vi: as a medial, before d the g is sounded hard almost all over Icel., and the d soft (sagði); yet in the peninsula of Snæfells Sýsla many people still reverse this rule, and say sagdi, lagdi, bygdi, byggdi, sounding the g soft but the d hard; in the east of Icel. people say bregða, sagði, pronouncing gð both soft; this is no doubt the best pronunciation, and accords well with the modern English said, laid, and the like.

III. the aspirate g is sounded, 1. as initial before a soft vowel or j, gefa, gæta, geyma, geir, gjöld. 2. as final, a double g (gg) or g after a consonant is sounded as aspirate in all instances where a single g is lost (vide above), thus laggir, leggja, byggja, bygggi, veggir, or margir, belgir, göfgr, engi, mergjar, elgjar, engja. Between two consonants the g is not pronounced, thus fylgdi, morgna, fylgsni, bólgrna are sounded as fylði, morna, fylsni, bólnar.

C. SPELLING.—Here is little to notice: I. in old MSS. the aspirate g as initial is frequently marked by the insertion of i after it, thus giarta, giefa, = gæta, gefa, but this is not now used. II. in old Norse MSS.,—and, by way of imitation, in some Icel.,—the soft g before a vowel is frequently marked by inserting b after it, thus dagh, deggi, vegga, sagha; in the Middle Ages many foreign MSS. expressed soft sounds in this way, and so they wrote db = ð, gb = soft g, tb = p, whence comes the tb in modern English; we also find gb in words such as Helghi, Fb. pref.; probably the g was in olden times sounded soft in vg, lg, which agrees with the change in English into boly, sorrow, etc. ngb = ng also occurs, e. g. erlinghi, Fb. i. 537, denoting a soft sound of ng as in modern Danish and Swedish. In MSS. we now and then find a spurious g before j and a vowel, e. g. deygja, meygja, for deyja, meija, because the sound was the same in both cases.

D. CHANGES.—The hard and aspirate g, especially as initial, usually remains in modern foreign languages, gair, ghost, give, ger, except in Engl. yard, yarn (Icel. garð, garn), etc., where the Anglo-Saxon had a soft g sound. Again, 1. the soft g after a vowel takes a vowel sound, and is in English marked by w, y, or the like, day, say, saw, low, bow, way, low, = Icel. dag, segja, sög, lög, bogi, veg, lág, etc.; and even a double g, as in lay, buy, = Icel. leggja or leggja, byggja. 2. to ab before or after a consonant, thus, Engl. said, rain, gain, sail, tail, hail, fowl, etc., = Icel. sagði, regn, gagn, segl, tagl, hagl, fugl; Engl. sorrow, follow, worry, borrow, belly, = Icel. sorg, fylgja, felagi, vargr, byrgi, belgr. In Dan. lov, skov, vej answer to Icel. lög, skóg, veg, whereas Sweden and Norway have kept the g, Swed. lag, skog, väg.

E. INTERCHANGE.—Lat. b and Gr. χ answer to Icel. and Tent. g, but the instances of such interchange are few, e. g. Lat. bostis, domus, bomo, bordus, beri, = Icel. gestr, garðr, gumi, geit, gær; Lat. bio, Gr. χῶρος, cp. Icel. gjá, gina; Gr. χῶρις = gær; χῶν = gáss, χολή = gall, etc. GABB, n. mocking, mockery, Fms. vii. 17. 59, ix. 385, Sturl. i. 155. Sks. 247, Karl. 474, Grett. 101.

GANDR, m.:—the exact sense of this word is somewhat dubious; it is mostly used in poetry and in compds, and denotes anything enchanted or an object used by sorcerers, almost like zauber in Germ., and hence a monster, fiend; thus the Leviathan of northern mythology is called Jörmund-gandr, the great 'gand'; or Stordar-gandr, the 'gand' of the carib; a snake or serpent is by Kormak called gandr or gandr, Korm. ch. 8; wildfire is hallar g., a warrior of balls, and selju g., a willow-warrior, Lex. Poët.; the wolf Fenrir is called Vonar-gandr, the monster of the river Von, vide Edda. compds: Gand-álfr, m. a pr. name, a wizard, bewitched demon.

gand-reið, f. the 'witches' ride; in nursery tales a witch is said to ride on a broomstick, Germ. besenstiel; in old lore they were said to ride by night on wolves, which are hence in poetry called 'the steeds of witches'; fá þú mér út krókstaf minn ok bandvetlinga þri at ek vil á gandreid fara, Fms. iii. 176; ekki skorti gandreidir í cynni um nóttina, Fas. ii. 131; hann kvað hann séð hafa gandreid, ok er þat jafnan fyrir stórtíðindum, Nj. 195; cp. also on this subject Ísl. (a witch) went out (cp. útiseti) and reared her 'gands,' i. e. raised ghosts, or gener. exercised her black art,—the MSS. have here even neut. gaund (gönd) sin. The compd spá-gandar in Vsp. seems to mean 'spae-ghosts' or spirits of divination.

For Some commentators render gandr by wolf, others by broom; but the sense no doubt lies deeper. Gunnar Pálsson (died 1793) says that gandr is used in Icel. of the helm of a ship; but no such word is known, at least in the west of Icel.

Engl. go; Dan.-Swed. gange or gå; Germ. gehen; Ivar Aasen ganga; Icel., Scots, and Norsemen have preserved the old ag, which in Germ. and Swed.-Dan. only remains in poetry or in a special sense, e. g. in Germ. compds.]

In many languages the equivalents are curious, Engl. girl, Swed. flicka, Norse genta (proned. yenta, vide Asbjörn's Tales), Icel. stúlka, Dan. pige,—all words that baffle etymologists. The Germans seem to have no such word, as mädchen and mädel are plain enough. The Lapps have ganda = a girl, which may be the origin of genta.

GESTR, m., gen. gests; pl. gestir, acc. gesti; [Ulf. gasts = félos; A. S. gest; Engl. guest; Germ. gast; Dan. gjæst; Swed. gäst; Lat. hospes];

I. a guest; the original meaning of this word is a stranger, alim, cp. Lat. hospes.

β. the Guests, one division of the king's men; the Guests were a kind of policemen, and had not the full privileges of the king's guardsmen or hirdmenn, although they were in the king's pay; they had their own seats in the king's hall, the guests' bench, gosta-bekkr, m., Fb. i. 347; their own chief, gosta-höfðingi, a. m., Nj. 7, Hkr. ii. 69, Fms. vii. 35; their own banner, gosta-merki, n., Fms. ix. 489; their own meeting, gosta-ásteina, u. f., Fms. viii. 250; they formed a separate body, gosta-ásteit, f., Fas. i. 318; skulu þar fylgja hirdmenn ok gestir, Ó. H. 204, in the battle at Stiklastað: a guests' ball, gosta-akáli, a. m., is mentioned in Eg. 28, Fas. ii. 93: a ship, gosta-akip (gosta-floy), n., Fms. viii. 139; cp. the Sagas passim, esp. the Konunga Sögur, Fms. x. 147, Hkr. passim, but esp. N. G. L. in the section Hirds-skra, or the law (rules) for the king's men, and Sks. 257 sqq. As the gestir were lower in rank than the hirdmenn, a recruit had often to serve his apprenticeship among them, e. g. var hann í gesta-ásteit, he was seated among the guests, i. e. was held in small repute, Fas. i. 51.

II. a stranger, guest, Lat. hospes, but keeping the old notion of a stranger, prop. an accidental guest, chance comer, and is distinguished from bodis-maðr, an invited guest, or the like; hence the allit. phrase, gestr ok gangandi, a guest and ganger, since with the ancients the poor had to go from house to house (cp. gangleri); this is to be borne in mind, if one would understand old sayings such as, Guð elr gesti, God feeds guests, Bs. i. 247; or many passages in the old heathen poem Háva-mál, e. g. órir gestir við gest, guest quarrels with guest, Hm. 31; gestir at gest hæðinn, guest mocking guest, 30, which reminds one of Hom. Od. xvi. 1-33; gest þú nó geyja né á grind hreikir (scold not at a guest, nor drive him to the door), get þú váluðum vel, Hm. 136, where gestr (a guest) and válaðr (a vagrant) are used synonymously; ganga skal, skala gestr vera æ í einum stað, 34. In olden times there were no public hostels, and all entertainment was (as it still is in Icel.) private bounty; a fine instance of a munificent hostess of the heathen age is recorded in Landn.—Geirriðr spardi ekki mat við menn, ok lét gora skála sinn of þjóðbraut þvera, hön sat á stóli ok láðaði úti gesti, en borð stóð inni jafnan ok matr á, 2. 13. After the introduction of Christianity, when churches were built and endowments given, the donors often imposed the duty of 'feeding guest and ganger for a night' (ala gest ok ganganda), Dipl. i. 169, 174; or, þar er ekki gesta eldi skylt (it is not required to feed guests), ala hvern at ósekju er vill, 200; ala þurfa-menn ok þá er fara skylda-crinda, 201, cp. 273 passim:—gener, a visitor, gest: gosta-öldi, u. shelter for guests, D. I. (vide above): gosta-fluga, u. f. a guest-fly, a moth, Isl. þjóðs. i. 558: gosta-herbergi, n. a 'guest-barbour', hostel, inn, Gr. καταλύμα, Luke ii. 7: gosta-hús, n. a guest-house, Sturl. i. 216, ii. 191: gosta-koma, u. f., gosta-naud, n. a coming, crowding of guests: gosta-maðr, m. a guest-man (bishops had a special servant so called), Bs. i. 850, 876: gosta-rúm, n. a guest-bed: gosta-skáli, a. m. a guest-chamber, Hom. 36: gosta-spjót, n. pl., a cat is said to raise the 'guest-spears' when it lies on its back and cleans itself with its hind legs, which is a token that a stranger is at hand, Isl. þjóðs. i. 558.

III. as pr. names, Landn., freq.; also in compds, Þor-gestr, Heim-gestr, God-gestr, Hleva-gastir on the Golden horn (Bugge's reading), and Gr. ἑερο-φών, ἑερο-φώνος. Gestr is a name of Odin = the Traveller, Edda, Vpm., Gm., Hervar. S. ch. 15 (Gestum-blindi). It is curious to notice that whereas with the Romans bostis came to mean a foe, with the Teutons (as with the Gr. ἔχρος) the equivalent word became a term of friendship, used of a friend staying at one's house.

gest-ríainn, adj. hospitable, Greg. 32, Bs. i. 101, 1 Tim. iii. 2, Tit. i. 8, 1 Pet. iv. 9, passim.

gest-ríani, f. hospitality, 655 v. 2, Bs. i. 81, 830, Rom. xii. 13, Heb. xiii. 2, passim.

gest-vænliga, adv. hospitably, Vápn. 23, (prob. a false reading.)

GETA, pret. gat, 2nd pers. gatz, pl. gátu; pres. get; pret. subj. gæti; sup. getið, but getat in the mod. sense of could; part. getinn; reflex. pres. and pret. getsk or gezk, gatsk or gatz, mod. gezst and gazst; with the neg. suff. gátu-ð, Korm. 224, Sighvat; gat-at, Lex. Poët.

WITH ACC.

A. [Ulf. begitan = ἐπιπλεον; A. S. getan; Engl. get; O. H. G. gezan]:—to get; this use of the word, which is so common in Engl., is dying out in Icel.; it is found in the old poems, esp. in the old Hm.; it is used in law phrases, but is rare in common prose, even in the oldest Sagas; geta þögn, to get silence, a bearing, Höfuðl. 3, Hm. 8; geta orðstír, to get fame; en orðstír deyr aldri heim sér göðan getr, 75; orðstír of gat, Eirekr at þat, Höfuðl.; ey getr kvíkr kú, Hm. 69; sjaldan liggiandi úlfir lær um getr, né sofandi maðr sigr, 57; ef hann sylg um getr, 17; né þat máttu... geta hvergi, they could nowhere get it, Hym. 4; gambanteim at geta, gambanteim ek gat, Skm. 34; hvar gatzú vára aura, Vkv. 12; geta gjaford, to marry, Alm. 6: geta sér, to get for oneself; hættir er heimis-kviðr nema sér göðan geti, Sdm. 25; sá er sáll er sér um getr lof ok líknstafi, Hm. 8; er sér getr slikan sefa, Hkm. 19; göðs um æðis, ef sér geta mætti, if he could get it, Hm. 4; geta gjöld, laun e-s, 64, 124, Gm. 3; geti gott af e-m, to get good of one, Hm. 43, 44:—in law, nema hann geti þann kvíð, at..., unless he can get that verdict, that..., Grág. i. 17; göðinn sekk af hann getr engi (acc.) til at nefna fóránsum, 95; ella skal hverr þeirra geta mann fyrir sik, 26:—in common prose, biðja konu þeirrar er honum væri sómi í, ef hann geti, Fms. xi. 47; veit ek eigi hvar sú kona sitr er mér 6 mikilt happ í at geta, Ld. 88: to get, earn, svá at hann megi sér mat geta af sínu fé eðr verkum, Grág. i. 293:—to get, learn, fútt gat ek þegjandi þar, Hm. 104; lengi man þat er ungr getr, an old saying, Isl. ii. 248; þá skal hann eiga stefnu við fimm lögmenn, þá er hann má helst geta af (five lawyers of whom he can best learn, i. e. five of the wisest men of law) eðr hann segi hvem þátt upp, Grág. i. 3.

2. with dat. of the person added, mostly in reference to feeding or entertaining: get þér vel at bordinu, keep a good table, Skv. 20; get þú váluðum vel, entertain well the poor, Hm. 136; nú er honum vel getið (he has good cheer) af gnóguðum mat ok góðum drykk, Str. 7; geta e-m sumbl, to give a feast to one, Ls. 8; geta e-m fötlaug, to get him a foot-bath, Hkv. 2. 37; geta e-m drápu, to entertain one with a poem, Sighvat: the phrase, geta sér (e-m) vel, illa, to do, cause good or evil to one; ofsmæli hygg ek at illa geti hveim er..., a loose tongue will bring evil to any one that..., Vpm. 20; en ef hann fordask minn fund þá mun hann sér illa geta í því, if he shuns me he will do worse to himself, Orkn. 252 (in a verse).

II. joined to an infinitive, a participle, or a supine, to get to do (fá, q. v., is used in a similar sense),—hence to be able:

1. almost like an auxil. verb, a. with infin. but without 'at': ek gat k unna Gunnari, I got to love G., Ög. 21; en sá gat taka við syndum, Sl. 6; ek gat líta, I got to see, bebeld, Korm. 14 (in a verse); ek gat blóta, Halldór (Fs. 94); getum hræra, we do rear, Edda; geta sjá, to get to see, Hkr. i. 205 (in a verse); hann gat teygja at sér, he did draw to himself, Edda 65 (in a verse); geta fæða, to give birth to, Am. 103; ef hann eignask getr, Hm. 78; hveim er eiga getr, Hkv. Hjörv. 9:—with 'at', esp. in the phrase, geta at sjá, líta; þá geta þeir Hákon jarl at líta, earl H. got to see, bebeld, Fms. xi. 131; þá gátu menn at sjá land fyrir stafn fram, 656 C. 22; Sölvi gat at líta hvar þeir flyðu, Nj. 247; Enok gat at eiga þann son, Stj. 45; gat at heita, Rm. 42.

β. with part. acc., with a notion of being able, Lat. posse; Gyðingar gátu enga sök sannada, the Jews could not prove any of their charges, 656 C. 19; því mér lízt svá, sem vér munim þá aldri sóttu geta, Nj. 197; ef vér getum Harald Gráfeld af lífi tekinn, Fms. xi. 21; ok geta rétta fylking sína, 131; mikinn fisk ok fagran ok gátu eigi veiddan, iv. 89.

γ. so also with sup.; gátu þeir ekki at gört, Nj. 115; ok hætta á hvárt ek geta keypt (kaup, v. l.) fyrir yðr, if I can get a bargain for you, 157; Björn gat séð (bebeld) manna-reiðina, 260; ef ek gæta vel fyrir mér séð, 22; sem mest gat hann flutt eptir sér, Ö. H. 85; eigi at heldr gat hann veitt þann skorna, id.; ef ek get eigi fylgt yðr, Fms. vi. 211.

δ. absol. in old writers geta seems never to occur in the sense of to be able, but only periphrastically as above; but in mod. usage geta has almost displaced the old verb kunna in this sense, e. g. get þú það ekki, I cannot; getuðu komið, canst thou come? ef hann hefði getað, if he could have; ekki þurfti, eg gat, I could, and endless other instances.

III. impers. there is got, there is, cp. Germ. es giebt; eigi getr slíkan (there is none such) í konungs herbergjum, Fms. vii. 148; þar getr stein (acc.) er asbestos heitir, there is got the stone asbestos, xi. 415; eigi getr vittra mann, no wiser man is to be got; slíka menn getr varla til vittrleiks, Lv. 54; þar getr reykelsti, Hb. 8.

Geysir, m. the name of a famous hot spring in Iceland. Foreign writers often use geysir as an appellative; but the only Icel. words for hot springs are hver (a cauldron, hot well) and laug (a hot bath). The present Geysir is never mentioned in old writers, and it seems from a record in the Icel. Annals that the great hot wells in the neighbourhood of Haukadal were due to the volcanic eruptions of 1294, when old hot springs disappeared and those now existing came up,—hjá Haukadal komu upp hverir stórir en sumir hurfu þeir er áðr höfðu verit; unfortunately the end of Árna S. (the bishop), the sole historical work of that time, is lost. The word geysir = a gusher must be old, as the inflexive -ir is hardly used but in obsolete words (læknir á leach, hellir á cave, etc., are exceptional); it was probably borrowed from some older hot spring. A pretty legend, referring to the 'moving' of springs when defiled with innocent blood, is recorded in Ísl. þjóðs. ii. 112, 113; this tale could not have sprung up unless a change in the place of the hot springs had been observed.

geytlan, f. gluttony, Róm. 306, (an ár. ley).

-GI (or -KI after t or s), a particle suffixed to nouns and adverbs.

A. In a positive sense [Lat. -que], ever, Lat. -que, -cunque: 1. with the pronoun hverr (quis) through all cases, answering to the Lat. quis-que: out of the laws we can nearly make a full paradigm:—nom. hverr-gi or hver-gi, Lat. quis-que, qui-cunque, Grág. Kb. i. 14, 31, 45, 85, 171 (twice), 183, 195, 221, ii. 7, 23, 82, 101: nom. and acc. neut. hvat-ki (quod-que), i. 34, 155, 162, 183, 244, ii. 77, 140, 154, Jónsv. 15, Íb. 3; also hvárt-ki, id., Grág. Kb. i. 61 (twice); gen. hvers-ki (cuius-que), 238: dat. hversun-gi (cui-que), 31, 156: acc. masc. hvern-gi (quem-que), 147, 155, 221, 225, 245, ii. 47, 66: abl. hve-gi or hvi-gi, however, i. 147, 195, ii. 64, 101, 128, 151, Jónsv. 14:—plur. acc. neut. hver-gi (quae-que): dual dat. sing. hvárun-gi megin, on both sides (of a river), Grág. Kb. ii. 93:—even in historical prose, því at hit næsta sumar gat hvergi ber á Íslandi, the following summer every man gathered berries in Iceland (to make some kind of wine), Is. i. 135, (or are we to read hvar-gi, everywhere?). 2. with adverbs; hvert-ki (quocun-que modo), Grág. ii. 50; nær-gi, whenever (ubi-cunque), i. 191; hvar-gi, wherever, 25, 166, 240, ii. 128, 212.

B. In a negative sense, with a few pronouns, adjectives, adverbs, and rarely in old poems with substantives: 1. with nouns, in the pr. name Lopt-ki, an ár. ley, Is. 19; with appellatives, þörf-gi, no need, an ár. ley, Ílkv. Hjörv. 39; freq. in mann-gi, no man, cp. Lat. nemo, Íb.

which is even used in mod. writers and poets; vært-ki, naught; vettu-gi (dat.) and vetter-gis (gen.), Vsp.: with adjectives, ein-gi (q. v.), none, a common word; otherwise rare, sjálf-gi, 'self-not', i. e. not oneself, Is. 29, an ár. ley: with a dat. case of langr, þá löngu-gi, then not for a long time, Konr. (MS.): with pronouns, in the dual, hvárt-gi, neither, Lat. neuter, Grág. Kb. i. 46, ii. 93, 151; gen. hvárs-kis (neutrius), freq.; dat. hvárun-gi (neutri), i. 215; hvárum-gi, ii. 63; neut. hváru-gi, 216; hitt-ki, no illud quidem, Hm. 21, 23; þat-ki, Hbl. 6; þat-ki at ek fá (not even that I get) mála minn falslausan, Mork. 83.

2. with adverbs, only in poetry or laws or very old prose; svá-gi, not so, Grág. Kb. ii. 99, Mork. 83; þá-gi, then not; þey-gi, though not, qs. þó-gi; æva-gi, never: again, hver-gi (q. v.), nowhere; ei-gi (q. v.), not; aldri-gi (q. v.), never; hvár-ki (q. v.), neither, are common words in prose and in speech. The negative -gi can never be suffixed to verbs (vide -at, p. 2); therefore byð-gi, nom jubeo (in Íslands-vaka 61, a poem of the last century, Fél. i. 236), is a spurious imitation of the old idiom; neither can -at be put to nouns; ráð-at hann kunni, Jónas 105, ought therefore to be ráð hann kunni-t, issue he knew not.

C. In an indefinite sense; in a few instances -gi seems to be used almost like Latin quidem with a preceding negative; eigi miklo-gi minna, ne multo quidem minus, Heiðar. S., Ísl. ii. 360; eigi stóru-gi meiri, ne multo quidem majora, 386; engi miklo-gi görr..., nemo multo quidem plus..., Grág. i. 209; cp. also the adverbs öllum-gis or öldun-gis, quite, altogether (allr, -gi); einun-gis, only, solely (einn, -gi), both formed from dat. sing.: the obsolete vel-gi (qs. vel-gi) is ambiguous, being used both in a neg. sense = not well, and posit. = well, bene quidem, cp. Is. i. 393, note; Hm. 66, málun-gi, is doubtful;—prob. þyrftig-at málun-gi mat should be read, -at being taken not as a prep. but as a negative verbal suffix, and -gi as a positive suffix; Icel. now say, hann á ekki málungi matar, he does not know where to look for his next meal.

D. The negative -gi is peculiar to Scandin., and no traces of it are found in any Saxon nor German idioms; whereas, as a positive suffix, it is common to all Teutonic tongues, and remains in the Engl. many and any; 'many' being qs. man-y = man-ever, 'bomo-cunque', Goth. manags, and 'any' qs. anc-y = every-one; so also is the g in Icel. margr and hvángr, which are remnants—the former of the positive, the latter of the negative -gi.

GILKR, m., pl. ir, [Dan. gjæk = jester], a pert, rude person. COMPS: gikka-háttir, m. pert manner. gikka-ligr, adj. pert, rude; the saying, hver sem gíkkinn fær af honum hnykkinn, who meddles with a 'gik' will get a kick.

GIL, n., gen. pl. gilja, dat. giljum, [Gbyll or Gill in North. E. and Scot. local names]:—a deep narrow glen with a stream at bottom, like the Gr. χαράδρα; brooks and tributary streams flowing through clefts in the fell side to the main river at the bottom of a vale are in Icel. called gil; very freq. in local names, Ísfrðinga-gil, Branda-gil, Hauka-gil, Hrafná-gil, Heiðra-gil, Gilj-á, Þver-gil, vide Landn.; (a chasm without water or with stagnant water is not gil, but gjá; also gljúfr, a deep chasm forming the bed of a river), Valla L. 223, Hrafn. 7, Eg. 766, Ld. 218, Krók. 64, Fms. vii. 149, passim. COMPS: Gils-bakki, a, m., prop. Gill-bank, a local name, Landn., whence Gils-bökkingar, m. pl. the name of a family, Landn. gils-botn, m. a gill bottom, Sturl. i. 82, 84. gils-gjá, f. a chasm with a gill (rare), Grett. 111. gils-próm, f. the edge of a gill, Ld. 218, Dropl. 23, Grett. 111.

gilda, t, to be worth so and so, only in mod. usage, esp. in metaph. and impers. phrases, mig gildir einu, I do not mind; láttu þig einu g., never mind; hvað sem gildir, at any price; hirt aldrei hvað sem gildir, at hætta á ósatt mál, Pass. 13. 2.

GILDI, n. [gjalda]; Ulf. gild = tribute, Luke xx. 23, Mark xii. 14; A. S. gild; Hel. geld; Frank. chalta; Germ. geld = money; it remains in Old Engl. weragild:—payment, tribute; this sense is very rare, as gjal (q. v.) is the common word; chiefly used in compds, as nef-gildi, head-tax; baug-gildi, q. v.; skatt-gildi, a tax; skulda-gildi, payment of debts, Grág. i. 302. 2. recompense; in the saying, æ sér til gildis gjof (mod. æ sér gjof til gjalda), Hom. 146. 3. value; al-gildi, full-g., whole, full, balf value; íð-gildi or í-gildi, equivalence; hón er karlmanna-ígildi. Þ. worth, value, esteem; the phrase, vera í miklu, litlu, engu gildi, to be in great, small, no repute; ón Drottins ráða er aðstoð manns í engu minsta gildi, Pass. 9. 2; freq. in mod. usage, but rare in old writers, þegar er komizt í gildi við höfðingja eðr kærleika, Finnb. 266.

II. a banquet, feast, [cp. Dan. gilde; so called from the fee paid?], Eg. 20 sqq., Edda 45, 57, Fb. i. 283, Gpl. 178, freq. in old poems; the poetical mead is called Gauta g., Kormak; or gildi Grjótdaldr, the cheer of the Giants; gefa úlfum gildi, to feast the wolves, Lex. Poët.; to this seems to belong the passage in Vsp. 27, hvárt skyldi Æsir afrað gjalda eðr skyldi goðin öll gildi eiga, where the eiga gildi means to hold a feast, with the notion of making a league or peaceful agreement, as opp. to gjalda afrað (q. v.), to pay tribute as a badge of submission.

III. in a technical sense, a guild, throughout England and Scandinavia during the Middle Ages; the first guilds in Norway were instituted by king Ólave (1066–1093), Ólafur konungr lét setja Mikla-gildi í Niðarósi, ok mörg önnur í kaupstöðum, en áður voru hvítings-drykkjur (but before there were drinking-bouts), Fms. vi. 440: the guilds were secular brotherhoods or trades' unions (and often became political clubs); they assumed the names of saints or sacred things, as Kross-g., Cross-guild; Ólafs-g., St. Olave's guild (in Norway); Knúts-g., St. Canute's guild (in Denmark), and so on: in Icel. this sense rarely occurs, mælti at einhverri vildis-manna ætti at hefja gildit, Sturl. i. 20; ok var gildit at Ólafs messu hvert sumar, 23; cp. also gildis-fundur, m. a guild-meeting, mentioned in Sturl. i. 58; and gildis-bændr, m. pl. guild-franklins, guild-brothers, 23, (about the middle of the 12th century); but guilds never took root in Icel.: gildis-skáli, a, m. a guild-hall, Fms. viii. 160, ix. 22, D. N. passim: gildis-tíð, n. a guild-term, Fms. viii. 151.

III. in mod. usage, stout, brawny, cp. Grett. 148: Icel. now say gildr of a man, digr of things; but in compds, mittis-digr, not mittis-gildr; to use digr and digrask (q. v.) for gildr and gildna is now thought rude; but in olden times only digr was used in that sense, e. g. Ólafur Digri, Þorbjörg Digra (a lady); the passage referred to, Grett. 148, comes near the mod. sense of that word, but is not to be so understood.

L. i. 8, passim; in mod. usage Icel. distinguish between gjöf and göta, using the latter of the gifts of nature, gifts of mind, cleverness, but gjöf in a material sense. The ancients were fond of exchanging gifts, which were either a part of hospitality or tokens of friendship; the former were munificent, the latter might be small, Hm. 51: at a feast (wedding, funeral, or the like) the host used to make gifts to all his more honoured guests at departure; the technical phrase for this was, leysa menn út með gjöfum, to dismiss with gifts; voru alla menn með gjöfum brott leystir; hence útlauðir, departure from a feast, Sturl. iii. 268; a departing friend or visitor had to be dismissed with a gift (kynnis-gjöf, Fms. vi. 358). The gifts consisted chiefly of weapons and costly clothes; but favourite gifts were a steed (Bjarn. 55, 58) or oxen of a fine breed (Sturl. i. 106), hawks, tents, sails, white bears (Ó. H. ch. 114, Fms. vi. ch. 72–75, 100, Hung. ch. 2), or short anything that was rare and costly, görsimi, metfé. Again, friends had to exchange gifts, so as to cement their friendship, cp. Havamal passim,—vápnun ok váðum skulu vinir gleðjask; gefendr ok endrgetendr erusk lengst vinir, 40; gjalda gjöf við gjöf, 41; geði skaltu við hans (viz. the friend) blanda ok gjöfum skipta, 43; glík skulu gjöld gíofum, 45; sýtir æ glöggr við gjöfum, 47. Gifts were obligatory, and were a token of grace and goodwill on the part of giver and receiver. A gift when received was called the 'nautr' of the giver, e. g. a ring or sword presented by a king was konungs-nautr. The instances in the Sagas are very many, e. g. Eg. ch. 36, 81, Ld. ch. 7, 27, 43, 45, Sturl. passim, Glúm. ch. 6, 25, Vápu. p. 19, Hrafn. 23, Lv. ch. 14, 15, Ó. H. ch. 114, Har. S. Gilla ch. 16, Hung. ch. 13, 17, Páls. S. ch. 16, and last, not least, the curious Gautr. S.; the remark of Tacit. Germ. ch. 21, gaudent muneribus, sed nec data imputant nec acceptis obligantur, is only partly true; ást-gjafir, love-gifts; vin-gjafir, friend-gifts, cp. Gr. férim, Ó. N. G. L. i. 27, 29, 51, passim; til-gjöf, a dowry,—all referring to a wedding; með-gjöf = fullga, q. v.; ó-gjöf, q. v.; milli-gjöf, discount; lif-gjöf, pardon; ofanu-gjöf, rebuke; Icel. also give the name to juddering, setja á gjöf, hence gjafar-mál, n. fuddering, baur, Gpl. 442.

GLER, n. [A. S. glas; Engl. glass; Germ. glas; early Dan. glar; the mod. Dan. and Swed. glas seem to be borrowed from Germ.; Icel. distinguish between gler (glass) and glas (a small glass bottle); but s seems to be the original consonant, and the word is akin to Glástr, glys, glæsa, q. v.]:—the word originally meant amber, 'succinum' quod ipsi (viz. the Germans) glæsium vocant, Tacit. Germ. ch. 45; glass beads for ornament are of early use; quantities are found in the great deposits (in cairns and fens) of the earliest Iron Age, but only in a single instance in a deposit of the Brass Age (which ends about the beginning of our era), vide Ann. for Nord. Oldk. 1868, p. 118; and such is the sense of the word in the three places that it occurs in old heathen poems: magical Runes were written on glass, Sdm. 17: metaph., nú er grjót þat at gleri orðit, now those stones are turned into gler, of an altar 'glassed' with sacrificial blood, Hdl. 5; cp. also the curious reading, brestra í gleri, to be shivered, to break into shivers, Hym. 29.—the reading of Kb., 'í trau,' is a gloss on the obsolete phrase:—glas also occurs twice or thrice in A. S. poetry, but not in the oldest, as Beowulf, vide Grein. For window-panes glass is of much later date, and came into use with the building of cathedrals: a Danish cathedral with glass panes is mentioned in Knyt. S. ch. 58 (year 1085); in Icel. the first panes brought into the country were probably those presented by bishop Paul to the cathedral at Skálholt in the year 1195; the ancient halls and dwellings had no windows in the walls, but were lighted by louvres and by round openings (gluggar) in the roof, covered with the caul (of a new-born calf, called skjall or líkna-belgr) stretched on a frame or a hoop and called skjár: these are still used in Icel. farms; and Icel. distinguish between the round small caul windows (skjár or skjá-gluggar) and glass windows (glær-gluggar):—háll sem glær, slippery as glass, of ice, Nj. 144: in eccl. and later writings, Hom. 127, Sks. 424, Vm. 21, Fas. iii. 393: in the saying, sjaldan brýtr gæfu-maðr glær. GLÍMA, u. f. [this word occurs neither in Germ. nor in Saxon, nor yet in the mod. Scand. tongues (of Sweden, Norway, and Denmark), and the origin is not known]:—wrestling, a favourite national sport with the Icel. people, in old as well as in modern times, answering to the Gr. wáky: glímu-brögð, n. pl. wrestling-tricks, vide brögð II. 2: to the technical terms there mentioned, add, hnykkir, hælkrókr, sveifla, etc.: glímu-sélagi, a. m. a wrestling-match, Háv. 41: glímu-færr, adj. able-bodied as a wrestler, Finnb. 328: glímu-galdr, m. a 'wrestler's spell', to charm one's legs and make them steady, Ísl. þjóðs. i. 1: glímu-maðr, m. a wrestler: glímu-mann-liga, adv. like a good wrestler, nimbly, Fax. iii. 502: glímu-völlr, m. the wrestling-ring. The earliest match recorded is that of Thor and the giantess Elli (Age),—for the tale vide Edda 33; freq. in the Sagas, Sturl. iii. 20, 268; glenz ok glímur, Fms. i. 149 sqq., 182, iii. 187, 188, Grett. and Finnb., Kjaln. passim, Eg. ch. 40; leikr (sport) and glíma are often used synonymously, as Ld. ch. 45. The glíma was a popular game at any meeting or festival, where many young and active men met together: thus at the banquet in Reykhólar (1119) the guests amused themselves by dancing, glímur, and story-telling, Sturl. i. 23; at the parliament (alþing) there was a palaestra, Fanga-breikka ('wrestling-brink'); in Glúm. ch. 13 a fight is recorded between the Northerners and Westerners assembled there; as also in Grett. ch. 75 (in the parliament at Hegrænes); in Gunnl. ch. 11 the crew of the ships in harbour made up a glíma. The mod. Icel. bænda-glíma is just the same, as it was practiced in the college at Hólar, and later in the school at Bessastadir, as also at fishing-stations and wherever young men came together; the young men are divided by lot into two parties, which are then drawn up in a row, each having their leader or 'bóndi' (whence the name); the bóndir pair off their men against one another to wrestle in the arena or defile between the two ranks, one after another; if the one side was weaker in number, or the one bóndi had lost all his men, he might challenge his antagonist, and their match decided the game, Eggert Itin. ch. 518. The bænda-glíma at college and school was by far the best-played, and much stress was laid on nimble and graceful movements. In Hom. 24 scurrilitas is rendered by glíma.

GOD, n. pl. [all the Teutonic languages have this word in common; Ulf. gufa, n. pl., Gal. iv. 8; guda, id., John x. 34, 35; and Guf, m.; A. S. godu, n. pl., and God, m.; O. H. G. Got: in mod. languages masc.; Engl. God; Germ. Gott; Dan.-Swed. Gud].

A. HISTORICAL REMARKS.—In heathen times this word was neuter, and was used almost exclusively in plur., as were also other words denoting Godhead, e. g. regin or rögn = numina, q. v.; and bönd, höpt, prop. = hands, and metaph. gods: — this plur. usage seems not to refer to a plurality of gods, but rather, as the Hebrew אֱלֹהִים, to the majesty and mystery of the Godhead; it points to an earlier and purer faith than that which was current in the later ages of the Scandinavian heathendom; thus the old religious poem Völuspá distinguishes a twofold order of gods, — the heavenly powers (regin or ginn-heitög göð) who had no special names or attributes, and who ruled the world, like the Múpa or Alfa of Gr. mythology; — and the common gods who were divided into two tribes, Æsir (Ases) and Vanir, whose conflict and league are recorded in Vsp. 27, 28, and Edda 47.

II. after the introduction of Christianity, the masculine gender (as in Greek and Latin) superseded the neuter in all Teutonic languages, first in Gothic, then in Old High German and Anglo-Saxon, and lastly in the Scandinavian languages; but neither in Gothic nor in Icel. did the word ever take the masc. inflexive r or s, so that it remains almost unique in form.

2. in Scandinavian the root vowel was altered from o to u (god to gud), [Swed.-Dan. gud], yet in old poems of the Christian age it is still made to rhyme with o, Goðs, boðnum; Goð, roðnar, Sighvat; as also in the oldest MSS. of the 12th century; sometimes however it is written þp, in which case the root vowel cannot be discerned.

3. in Icel. the pronunciation also underwent a change, and the g in Guð (God) is now pronounced gw (Gwud), both in the single word and in those proper names which have become Christian, e.g. Guðmundr pronounced Gwudmundr, whence the abbreviated form Gvindr or Gvöndr. The old form with o is still retained in obsolete words, as goði, goðorð, vide below, and in local names from the heathen age, as Goð-dalir; so also Gormr (q. v.), which is contracted from Goð-ormr not Guð-ormr. On the other hand, the Saxon and German have kept the root vowel o.

III. in old poems of heathen times it was almost always used without the article: gremdu eigi goð at þér, La.; áðr vér heilög goð blótum, Fas. i. (in a verse); ginnheilög Goð, Vsp. passim; goðum ek þat þakka, Am. 53; með goðum, Alm.; in prose, en goð hefna eigi alls þegar, Nj. 132.

2. with the article goð-in, Vsp. 27: freq. in prose, um hvat reiddusk goðin þá er hér brann hraunir er nú stöndu vér á, Bs. i. (Kr. S.) 22; eigi eru undr at goðin reidisk tölum sílkum, id.; Hallsfredr lastaði eigi goðin, þó aðrir menn hallmælti þeim, Fms. ii. 52; allmikinn hug leggri þú á goðin, Fs. 94; eigi munu goðin þessu valda, Nj. 132, passim.

3. very seldom in sing., and only if applied to a single goddess or the like, as Öndor-goðs (gen.), Haustl. 7; Vana-goð, of Freyja, Edda; enu skirleita goði, of the Sun, Gm. 39.

IV. after the introduction of Christianity, the neut. was only used of false gods in sing., as well as in pl., Sölar-goð = Apollo, Orrostu-goð = Mars, Drauma-goð = Morpheus, Bret. (Verel.); and was held up for execration by the missionaries; gör þik eigi svá djarfa, at þú kallir goð hinn hæsta konung er ek trúi á, Fb. i. 371. Yet so strongly did the neut. gender cleave to the popular mind that it remains (Grág. Kb. i. 192) in the oath formula, goð gramt = God gramr; and Icel. still say, i Guðanna (pl.) bænum.

2. guðir, masc. pl., as in A. S. gudas, is freq. in eccl. writers, but borrowed from the eccl. Lat.

In Fb. i. 23, the mythical king Raum is said to have had three sons, Alf, Björn, and Brand; the first was reared by the Finns, and called Finn-Alf; Björn by his mother (a giantess), and called Jötun-Björn; and Brand was given to the gods, and called Goð-Brand (Guð-brandr, whence Guðbrands-dalir, a county in Norway); cp. also Eb. ch. 7.

H. G.* glossaries, prob. meaning the same; and the form gupi twice occurs on Danish-Runic stones in Nura-gupi and Saulva-gupi, explained as godi by P. G. Thorsen, Danske Runem.; (Rafn's explanation and reading of Nura-gupi q. s. nordr á Gaudi, is scarcely right): with this exception the word is nowhere recorded till it appears in Icel., where it got a wide historical bearing]:—prop. a priest, sacerdos, and hence a liege-lord or chief of the Icel. Commonwealth.

A. HISTORICAL REMARKS.—The Norse chiefs who settled in Icel. finding the country uninhabited, solemnly took possession of the land (land-nám, q. v.); and in order to found a community they built a temple, and called themselves by the name of godi or hof-godi, 'temple-priest'; and thus the temple became the nucleus of the new community, which was called goðorð, n.—hence hof-godi, temple-priest, and höfðingi, chief, became synonymous, vide Eb. passim. Many independent goðar and goðorð sprang up all through the country, until about the year 930 the alþingi (q. v.) was erected, where all the petty sovereign chiefs (goðar) entered into a kind of league, and laid the foundation of a general government for the whole island. In 964 A.D. the constitution was finally settled, the number of goðorð being fixed at three in each þing (shire), and three þing in each of the three other quarters, (but four in the north); thus the number of goðar came to be nominally thirty-nine, really thirty-six, as the four in the north were only reckoned as three, vide lb. ch. 5. On the introduction of Christianity the goðar lost their priestly character, but kept the name; and the new bishops obtained seats in the Lögretta (vide biskup). About the year 1004 there were created new goðar (and goðorð), who had to elect judges to the Fifth Court, but they had no seats in the Lögretta, and since that time the law distinguishes between forn (old) and ný (new) goðorð;—in Glim. ch. 1 the word forn is an anachronism. It is curious that, especially in the 12th century, the goðar used to take the lesser Orders from political reasons, in order to resist the Romish clergy, who claimed the right of forbidding laymen to be lords of churches or to deal with church matters; thus the great chief Jón Loftson was a sub-deacon; at last, about 1185, the archbishop of Norway forbade the bishops of Icel. to ordain any holder of a goðorð, unless they first gave up the goðorð, sýrir því bjóðum vér biskupum at vigja eigi þá menn er goðorð hafa, D. l. i. 291. In the middle of the 13th century the king of Norway induced the goðar to hand their power over to him, and thus the union with Norway was finally brought about in the year 1262; since that time, by the introduction of new codes (1272 and 1281), the name and dignity of goðar and goðorð disappeared altogether, so that the name begins and ends with the Commonwealth.

B. DUTIES.—In the alþingi the goðar were invested with the Lögretta-skipan (q. v.), that is to say, they composed the Lögretta (the Legislative consisting of forty-eight members—on the irregularity of the number vide lb. ch. 5), and were the lawgivers of the country: secondly, they had the dómsnefna (q. v.), or right of naming the men who were to sit in the courts, vide dómr;—as to their duties in the quarter-parliaments (vár-þing) vide Grág. þ. þ. and the Sagas. The authority of the goðar over their liegemen at home was in olden times somewhat patriarchal, vide e.g. the curious passage in Hænsaþ. S. ch. 2; though no section of law relating to this interesting part of the old history is on record, we can glean much information from the Sagas. It is to be borne in mind that the goðar of the Saga time (10th century) and those of the Grágás and Sturlunga time (12th and 13th centuries) were very different: the former were a kind of sovereign chiefs, who of free will entered into a league; the latter had become officials, who for neglecting their duties in parliament might be fined, and even forfeit the goðorð to their liegemen, vide Grág. þ. þ. Neither þing (q. v.) nor goðorð was ever strictly geographical (such is the opinion of Konrad Maurer), but changed from time to time; the very word goðorð is defined as 'power' (veldi), and was not subject to the payment of tithe, K. þ. K. 141. The goðorð could be parcelled out by inheritance or by sale; or they might, as was the case in the latter years of the Commonwealth, accumulate in one hand, vide esp. Sturl. passim, and Grág. The liegemen (þingmenn) were fully free to change their lords (ganga í lög með goða, ganga úr lögum); every franklin (þingmaðr) had in parliament to declare his þingfesti, i. e. to name his liegship, and say to what goði and þing he belonged, and the goði had to acknowledge him; so that a powerful or skilful chief might have liegemen scattered all over the country. But the nomination to the courts and the right of sitting in the legislative body were always bound to the old names, as fixed by the settlement of the year 964; and any one who sought the name or influence of a goði had first (by purchase, inheritance, or otherwise) to become possessor of a share of one of the old traditional goðorð; see the interesting chapter in Nj. The three goðar in one þing (shire) were called sam-goðar, joint-goðar; for the sense of allsherjar-goði vide p. 17.

C. NAMES.—Sometimes a chief's name referred to the god whom he especially worshipped, as Freys-Góði, Hrafn., Gísl., whence Freys-gýðlingar, q. v.; (the ör-góði is dubious); more frequently the name referred to the liegemen or county, e. g. Ljósveitinga-Góði, Tungu-Góði, etc.; but in the Saga time, góði was often added to the name almost as a cognomen, and with some, as Snorri, it became a part of their name (as Cato Censor in Latin); hann varðveitti þá hof, var hann þá kallaðr Snorri Góði, Eb. 41; seg, at á sá sendi, er meiri vin var húsfrýjunnar at Fróða en Góðans at Helgafelli, 332. The name of the Gotbs with comps occurs freq. in Scand. history, esp. in Sagas referring to the mythical age; and distinction is made between Fy-Gotar, the Island-Gotbs, i. e. the inhabitants of the Danish Isles, and Reið-Gotar or Hreið-Gotar in the south of Sweden. According to Jormandes and the late Norwegian historian P. A. Munch, a race of Gothic origin, speaking a dialect closely akin to that of Ulfilas, lived in parts of Scandinavia during the 3rd and 4th centuries of our era; Munch even supposes that Ermanarík (Jörm-unrekr) was a Scandinavian-Gothic king, and lived in the 4th century, and that the Runic monuments on the Golden Horn, the stone in Tune, the Bracteats, etc., are of this and the subsequent period; on this interesting question see Munch's Norske Folk's Hist., vol. i, and several essays by the same. II. poet. a horse, Lex. S.), Hkr. iii. 23; cp. Gullfjóðr, gold feather, gold quill, name of an eccl. code; or Hryggjar-stykki, a kind of duck, but also the name of a book. 2. in later times (in the 16th century) the name Grágás was misapplied to an old MS. of Icel. laws of the Commonwealth time, the present Cod. Arna-Magn. 134 folio, or Sb., and has since been made to serve as a collective name for all Icel. laws framed before the union with Norway, sometimes including, sometimes excluding the eccl. law (Kristinna-laga þáttur = K. þ. K.); the whole matter is fully treated by Maurer, s. v. 'Graagaas,' in Ersch and Gruber's Encyclopedia; he makes out that the Icel. of the Commonwealth, although they had written laws, had no code, and that the passage in Íb. ch. 10 does not refer to codification, but to the committal of oral laws to writing; the two vellum MSS., the Kb. and Sb., are merely private collections of the 13th century, and differ very much one from the other. Upon the union with Norway, Iceland was for the first time blessed with a code, which they called Ironside (Js.); and a second code, the Jon's Book, was introduced A. D. 1281.

GUÐ, m.; the plur. used to render the Lat. dii is guðir; [for etymology and changes of this word see p. 207]:—God.

A. Though the primitive form Guð rhymes with boð (bidding), stöð (help), and many other words, the second form Guð rhymes with no single word, so that in hymns the poets are wont to use incomplete rhymes, as brauð (bread), nauð (need); and exact rhymes can only be obtained by the last syllables of derivatives, e.g. Íðranin blíðkar aptur Guð | ei verður syndin tilreiknuð, Pass. 40. 4; or Upphaf alls mesta ófögnuðs | áklögum ströng og reiði Guðs, 3. 14; Svo er nú syndin inn-sigluð | íðrandi sála kvítt við Guð, 50. 14; but these rhyme-syllables can only occur in trisyllabic words (Gramm. p. xv):—the following are examples of incomplete rhymes, Vinnir þér enga veittu að | svo vinskapi fengi eg við sannan Guð, Pass. 3. 7; Födurlegt hjarta hefir Guð | við hvern sem lítr kross og nauð, 3. 16; Herra minn þú varst halinn Guð | þá hæðni leiddst og krossinn nauð, 40. 16; as also in the hymn, Til þín Heilagi Herra Guð | hef eg lypt sálu minni | af hug og hjarta í hverri neyð | hjástöð treystandi þinni, Hólabók 108, rendering of Ps. xxv; Luther's hymn, Ein feste burg ist unser Gott, is in the Icel. rendering, Óvinnanlig borg er vor Guð | ágætá skjöldr og verja | hann frelsar oss af allri nauð, Hólabók 182; Fyrir valtan veraldar að | set þína trú á sannan Guð | sem allt skapaði fyrir sitt boð, 208 (in Hans Sachs's hymn); hugsjúkir eta harma brauð | hollari fæðu gefr Guð | sér ljúsum þá þeir sofa, 124, Ps. cxxvii. 2.

2. In Icel. many sayings referring to the name of God are still household words, e.g. in entering a house, as a greeting, hér sé Guð, God be here! (from Luke x. 5); in returning thanks, Guðs ást, God's love! Guð laun or Guð laun' fyrir mig, God's reward! Germ. vergelt's Gott! or gefidi þið í Guðs friði! to which the reply is, Guð blessi þig, God bless thee! (which is also the answer to a greeting or to thanks); Guðs friði! or vertu í Guðs friði, be in God's peace! is the usual farewell; and the answer is, Guð veri með þér, God be with thee! Guð hjálpi þér, God help thee! Germ. helf Gott! Engl. God bless you! (to one sneezing); Guð varðveiti þig, God ward thee! (to one playing with dangerous things); biðdu Guð fyrir þér! (denoting wonder), pray God! gæðu að Guði, bend God! take heed! fyrir Guðs skuld, for God's sake! ef Guð lofar, promised, as one word (cf. guðlogar, changing f into g), God willing, a common phrase when speaking of plans for the future, eg skal koma á morgun, cf. guðlogar, I will come to-morrow, God willing (from James iv. 13–15), occurs in Skálda (Thorodd) 165, as also, ef Guð vill, if God will (less freq.); Guði sé lof, God be praised! Guð gæfi, God grant! Guðs mildi, by God's grace; það var mesta Guðs mildi hann slasaði sig

guða, að, to shout 'God!' in Icel. it is the custom for a stranger arriving at a house at night after 'day-set' (dagsetr, q. v.), instead of knocking at the door, to climb to the louvre and shout, hér sé Guð, God be here! this is called að guða; the dialogue is well given in a ditty of Stefán Ólafsson, Hott, hott og hæ! Hér sé Guð í bæ! sælt fólk! allt! mér er sárkalt.—Svöruðu heima-hjú, Hvað heitir þú?—Eg heiti Jón, Jóhannas þjón, etc.; or in another ditty, Hér sé Guð á göðum bæ | geatr er á ljóra | andsvörin eg engin fæ | ekki vaknar þóra; or Guðað er nú á plugga | góðvinn kominn er, Jónas 119.

β. The word hafa is in the Icel., as in other Teut. languages, used as an auxiliary verb with a part. pass. of another verb, whereby a compound preterite and pluperfect are formed as follows:

I. in transitive verbs with acc. the participle also was put in acc., agreeing in gender, number, and case with the objective noun or pronoun; this seems to have been a fixed rule in the earliest time, and is used so in all old poems down at least to the middle of the 11th century, to the time of Sighvat (circ. A. D. 990-1040), who constantly used the old form,—átt is an apostrophe for átta in the verse Ó. H. 81:

1. references from poets, Gm. 5, 12, 16; þá er forðum mik fædda höfðu, Vsp. 2; hveit hefði lopt lævi blandit eðr ætt jótuns Óðs mey gefna, 29; þær's í árdaga áttar höfðu, 60; ek hafða fengna konungs reiði, Ad. 3; en Grjótbjörn um gnegðan hefir, 18; mik hefir marr miklu

2. references from prose; this old form has since been turned into an indecl. neut. sing. part. -it. The old form was first lost in the strong verbs and the weak verbs of the first conjugation: in the earliest prose both forms are used, although the indecl. is more freq. even in the prose writers, as Íb., the Heidarv. S., the Miracle-book in Bs., Njála, Ó. H., (Thorodd seems only to use the old form,) as may be seen from the following references, Björn hafði særða þrá menn, Nj. 262; hann mundi hana hafa gipta honum, 47; hann hafði þá leidda saman hestana, 264; ek hefi sendan mann, Ísl. (Heidarv. S.) ii. 333; ek hefi senda menn, id.; hafa son sinn ör helju heimtan, Bs. (Miracle-book) i. 337; en er þeir höfðu niðr settan sveininn, 349; hann hafði veidda fimmm tegu fiska, 350; er þér hefir illa neisu görva, Ó. H. 107; þá hefi ek fyrri setta þá í stafrófi, Skálda (Thorodd) 161; þar hefi ek við görva þessa stafi fjóra, id.; hafa hana samsettan, 167; góða fylgd hefir þú mér veitta, þorst Síðu H. 1: sagði, at Ólafr konungr hafði sendan hann, Bs. i. 11: þyri, er hertogi hafði festa naudga, Fms. x. 393 (Ágrip); hefi ek þá svá signaða ok magnaða, v. 236; hefir sólin gengna tvá hluti, en einn úgenginn, K. þ. K. 92 (Lund's Syntax, p. 12).

β. again, neut. indecl., hana hafði átt fyrr þoróddr, Ísl. ii. 192; hón hafði heimt húskarl sinn..., Ísl. (Heidarv. S.) ii. 339; hann hefir ekki svá vel gyrt best minn, 340; hefir þú eigi sá mik, 341; hve hann hafði lokkat hann, id.; gistingar hefi ek yðr fengt, 343; þeir höfðu haft úfrið ok orrostur, Íb. 12; hann hafði tekið lögsögu, 14; stafr er átt hafði þorlák, Bs. (Miracle-book) i. 340; er þær höfðu upp tekit ketilinn ok hañt..., 342; göngu es hann hafði gingit, 344; es sleggjuna hafði niðr felt, 346; sem maðr hefði nýsett (hana) niðr, id.; jartein þá er hann þóttisk singit hafa, 347; hafði prestinn fært fram sveininn, 349; hjálm er Hreidmarr hafði átt, Edda 73; hafa eñt sína heistrenging, Fms. (Jómsv. S.) xi. 141; slíkan dóm sem hann hafði mér hugat, Ó. H. 176, etc. passim:—at last the inflexion disappeared altogether, and so at the present time the indecl. neut. sing. is used throughout; yet it remains in peculiar instances, e. g. konu hefi eg mér festa, Luke xiv. 20, cp. Vídal. ii. 21. This use of the inflexive part. pass. may often serve as a test of the age of a poem, e. g. that Sólarkjóð was composed at a later date may thus be seen from verses 27, 64, 72, 73, 75, 79; but this test is to be applied with caution, as the MSS. have in some cases changed the true forms (-inn, -ann, and -it, -an being freq. abbreviated in the MSS. so as to render the reading dubious). In many cases the old form is no doubt to be restored, e. g. in vegit to veginn, Fm. 4, 23; búið to búinn, Hkv. Hjörv. 15; borit to borinn, Hkv. i. 1; bedit to bedinn, Fm. 48; orðit to orðin, Qg. 23; roðit to roðinn, Em. 5; brotið to brotinn, Vkv. 24, etc.: but are we to infer from Ls. 23, 26, 33, that this poem is of a comparatively late age?

II. the indecl. neut. sing. is, both in the earliest poems and down to the present day, used in the following cases:

1. with trans. verbs requiring the dat. or gen.; ek hefi fengit e-s, hann hafði fengit konu; hafa hefat e-s, Fms. xi. 25; sá er hafði bedit fjár, þkv. 32; stillir hefir stefnt mér, Hkv. Hjörv. 33, and so in endless cases.

2. in the reflex. part. pass.; þeir (hann) hafa (hefir) látisk, farisk, sagisk, etc.

3. in part. of intrans. neut. verbs, e. g. þeir þær (hann, hón), hafa (hefir) setið, staðit, gengit, legið, farit, komit, verit, orðit, lifað, dáit, heitið..., also almost in every line both of prose and poetry.

4. in trans. verbs with a neut. sing. in objective case the difference cannot be seen.

The compound preterite is common to both the Romance and Teutonic languages, and seems to be older in the former than in the latter; Grimm suggests that it originated with the French, and thence spread to the Teutons. That it was not natural to the latter is shown by the facts, that a. no traces of it are found in Gothic, nor in the earliest Old High German glossaries to Latin words. β. in the earliest Scandinavian poetry we can trace its passage from declinable to indeclinable. y. remains are left in poetry of a primitive uncompounded preterite infinitive, e.g. stóðu = hafa staðit, mundu, skyldu, vildu, etc., see Gramm. p. xxv, col. 2. þ. We may here note a curious dropping of the verb heft, at ek em kominn hingat til lands, ok verit áðr (having been) langa hríð utan-lands, Ó. H. 31, cp. Am. 51; barn at aldri, en vegit slíka hetju sem þorvaldr var, Glúm. 382. On this interesting matter see Grimm's remarks in his Gramm. iv. 146 sqq.

In most of these instances the acc. is the correct case, and the dat. is due either to careless transcribers or incorrect speaking; in some instances an enclitic um has been taken for a dative inflexion, thus e.g. sáttum haldi in Stor. l. c. is to be restored to sátt um haldi; eíðum haldit in Bkv. l. c. to eíð (for eíða) um haldit; in others the prep. um has caused the confusion, as 'haldia njón um at' has been changed into haldia njónum at. But in the main the distinction between the use of dat. and acc. is fixed even at the present time: the acc. seems to represent the more primitive usage of this verb, the dat. the secondary.

hamingja, u. f. luck, fortune; prop. in a personal sense, a guardian spirit, answering to the guardian angel of Christians; derived from hamr, for the guardian spirits of men—and every man had his hamingja—were believed to take the shape sometimes of animals, sometimes and more commonly of human beings, esp. that of women; but they were themselves supernatural beings; that the hamingjur were giant-females proceeding from the great Norns—who were the hamingjur of the world—is borne out by the passage in Vfm. 48. 49. Hamingja and fylgja or fylgju-kona (Hallfr. S. ch. 11) seem to be nearly synonymous, as also gæfa, gipta, auðna, heil; but hamingja is the most personal word, and was almost symbolical of family relationship. At the hour of death the hamingja left the dying person and passed into a dear son, daughter, or beloved kinsman; cp. Hallfr. S. ch. 11, and esp. the charming tale in Glúm. ch. 9. One might also impart one's own good luck to another, hence the phrase leggja sína hamingju með e-m, almost answering to the Christian, 'to give one's blessing to another.' Examples: sögðusk mundu leggja til með honum hamingju sína, Ld. 74; h. ok gæfa, Fms. vi. 165; þú en ústöðuga h., Al. 23; h. konungsins; 23; ok mun kona sjá hans h. vera er fjöldum herra gékk, Glúm. 345; eða hamingju við e-n, Fb. ii. 65; ok reyna hvat hamingjan vill unna þér, Fs. 4; vínask (bope) at h. mun fylgja, 23; vera má at þat sé til h. várrar ættar, 11; langzeligar nýttar munu menn hafa hans hamingju, Bs. i. 229; forlög ekki forðumst ill | fram kemt þáð hamingjan vill, Ólf. 3. 69; meiri í hreysti en hamingju, Gullþ. 21; sigri eðr hamingju manns þessa, Fs. 10. It is still used in Icel. almost as Heaven, Providence; þáð má Hamingjan vita, God knows; eg vildi Hamingjan gæfi, would to Heaven! Guð og Hamingjan, God and Good Luck; treysta Guði og Hamingjunni; eiga undir Hamingjunni, to run the risk; and in similar phrases. HANGA, pret. hékk, 2nd pers. hékkt, mod. hékst, pl. hengu; pret. subj. henga, mod. hengi; part. hanginn; pres. indic. irreg. hangi; a provincial weak pret. hangði also occurs a few times in old writers, e. g. Edda 76, which form is still heard in southern Icel. (in and about Reykjavík): [Ulf. baban; A. S. bam; Engl. bang; O. H. G. baban; Germ. hangen; Dan. bange; Swed. bänge]—to hang, Lat. pendere: a. to bang, be suspended; hvers manns alvarþni hékk yfir rúni hans, Eg. 88; vápn sín, er þar hengu hjá þeim, 377; þetta it stóra sverð er uppi hangir, Fas. iii. 120; hann hékk nú tvá daga á krossi hangit, 625, 79. β. to cleave to; svá hanga þykkt á þeim skotin, Al. 138; ok hangði hón á lífrinni þar til er hann dó, Edda 76; en ef við hangir, if it bangs fast to, N. G. L. i. 66. γ. to bang up, for smoking; eða tvau lær hengi, Hm. 66; whence hanginn, bung, smoked; hangði kjöt (proned. hangi-kjöt), bung, smoked meat. 8. to be banged, executed; amarr skyldi hanga, en öðrum steypa í forsinna Sarp, Fms. vii. 181; at eigi væri hverr yðvart mæklegr at hanga, 13; gengir þú at hanga, Am. 22, cp. Hm. 139, Fms. v. 212.

hangi, a, m. a law term, a body hanging on a gallows, Fms. v. 212: the mythol. phrase, sitja, setjask undir hanga, to sit under a gallows, of Odin, in order to acquire wisdom or knowledge of the future;—for this superstition see Yngl. S. ch. 7;—whence Odin is called hanga-guð, hanga-dróttinn, hanga-týr, the god or lord of the banged, Edda 14, 49, Lex. Poet.; varðat ek fróðr und fornum | fór ek aldregi at goldrum | ... nam ek eigi Yggjar feng und hanga, I became not wise under waterfalls, I never dealt in witchcraft, I did not get the share of Odin (i. e. the poetical gift) under the gallows, i. e. I am no adept in poetry, Jd. 3 (MS., left out in the printed edition). According to another and, as it seems, a truer and older myth, Odin himself was represented as hangi, hanging on the tree Ygg-drasil, and from the depths beneath taking up the hidden mystery of wisdom, Hm. 139; so it is possible that his nick-names refer to that; cp. also the curious tale of the blind tailor in Grimm's Märchen, No. 107, which recalls to mind the heathen tale of the one-eyed Odin sitting under the gallows.

HANN, pers. pron. masc. & fem. HÓN or HÜN, she; for the pronunciation of this word see introduction to letter H; as to the inflexion see Gramm. p. xxi; in the MSS. the word is usually abbreviated h = hann; h' or hō = hón; hm = hánnum; har = hennar; hi or he = henni: the old dat. masc. was hánnum, as shewn by rhymes, mána vegr und hánnum, Haustl.; but in Icel. it was no doubt sounded hánnum, by way ofumlaut; it was then sounded hónnum with a long vowel, and lastly honum with a short vowel, which also is the mod. form; the old MSS. often spell hánnum in full; the spelling hónnum in old printed books recalls the old form hánnum; from Pass. 9. 7 it may be seen that in the middle of the 17th century the dative was sounded precisely as at present. 3. sing. fem. hón (hō in mod. Norse, hoo in Lancashire) seems to be the older form; the MSS. use both forms hón and hūn, but the former is the usual one; it was prob. sounded hōn, which again points to a long root vowel, hānn, hāna? [Cp. Ulf. is; Germ. er; A.S., Engl. and Hel. he; old Fris. hi; in the Scand. idioms with a suffixed demonstrative particle, vide Gramm. p. xxviii; Dan. and Swed. han, hun, etc.]

B. As this word appears almost in every line only special usages need be mentioned, as, ef maðr færir ómaga fram ok beri fé undir hann (acc., sc. ómaga), eðr eigi hann (nom., the same) fé, þá skal hann (nom., sc. maðr) beida hann (acc., sc. ómaga) með vátta, at hann (nom., the same) seli hánnum (dat., sc. maðr) sjár-heimting á hönd þeim mönnum er hann (nom., sc. ómaga) á fé undir, Grág. i. 279; here the context is very perplexing, chiefly owing to the identity of acc. and nom. sing. masc., but also because the pron. is sometimes demonstr., sometimes reflexive; in the latter case an Icel. would now say sér instead of hánnum: so also, þá skal hann beida samþingis-göða, at hann fái honum (i. e. síðr) mann, 10: again, skal hann selja sókn ok vörn ef hann vill, ok svá varð-veizlu sjár síns þess er hann á hér eptir, 146; þá skal hón ráða við ráð frænda síns (þer) nokkurs, 307; Gunnarr kenndi féit at þat var lit sama sem hann (i. e. Njal) hafði honum (i. e. to Gunnar) greitt, Nj. 56.

II. the pers. pron. is often prefixed to a pr. name, as a sign of familiarity; farit upp til bestins ok gætið hans Kols, Nj. 56; eðr hvert maðr er hann Gunnarr, what sort of a man is Gunnarr? 81; ok hleypr á hann þorkel upp, 114; ok leitið er at honum Höskuldi, go and look after Höskuld, 171; sámd er ek veitta honum þórlú þróður þinum, Eg. 112; segir hann Pálmir, Fms. xi. 47; hón Ingibjörg, 49; hann Gísl, Grett. (in a verse); ok berjaak við hann Ólaf, Fagrisk. 86; hann Vigólf, Sól.; svá er, segir hann Þórðr, Isl. ii. 329;—this has become very freq. in mod. conversational usage, so that a person (nay, even an animal or a ship that has a name) is scarcely ever named without the pron., bidd' ann Jón að koma, segð' onum Jóni, vekt' ana Sigriði; hún Sigga litla, hann Jón litli, etc.; or of ponies, sækt' ann Brún, legð' á ana Skjónu; cp. the dialogue in Isl. þjóða. i. 612,—ég skal fylla mína hit, segir 'dn Hvít, ég ét sem ég þoli, segir 'ann boli, etc.; or Kvöldv. ii. 197,—táktú þarna frá 'enni Reyðr og gefð' 'enni Hymu, hún Húfa hefir flækt sig í niðrbandinu.

III. er hann = who, that; sá maðr er hann vill, Grág. i. 19, 27, 36, vide p. 132. 2. answering to Fr. on, Germ. man, Engl. one; væri sverðit til tækt er hann vildi, when one wished, Eg. 505; but this use is very rare.

haug-ligr, adj. hawk-like, of the eyes, appearance, Fms. x. 383, Lex. Poët. passim.

HAUKR, m. [A.S. beafoc; Engl. hawk; O.H.G. babueh; Germ. babicht; Dan. bøg; Swed. bök]:—a hawk, Fms. i. 119, xi. 21, Jb. 542: metaph. a hero, vera haukar görvir, Fms. vi. (in a verse); eiga sér hauk í horni, to have a hawk in the corner, to have one to back one; or perhaps the phrase is, hrók í horni, a rook in the corner, borrowed from chess. Hawks were in olden times carried on the wrist, whence in poetry the hand is called the seat, cliff, land of the hawk, haug-börð, klif, -land, -morr, -störð, -strönd, -völlr; the adjectives hawk-fránn (of the eye, flashing as a hawk's eye), hawk-ligr, -lyndr, -smarr, -snjallr are all of them epithets of a bold man, Lex. Poët.: hauka-veldi, n. hawking, Gpl. 429: hawk-nefr, m. hawk-bill, a nickname, Landn.; sparr-h., a sparrow-hawk. II. as a pr. name, Landn.; and in local names, Hauka-gili, Hauka-dalr, whence Haukdælir, m. pl. name of a family, Sturl.; Haukdæla-ætt, f. id.; Hauk-dœlskr, adj. belonging to that family.

hawk-staldar, or hawk-stallar, is a corrupt form of the A.S. beage-steald = young man, Og. 7, Skv. 3, 31, Edda (in a verse by a poet of the time of king Canute).

HAULL, m., acc. haul, a rupture, hernia, Bs. i. 208, Fél. ix. 218, where a distinction is made between kviðar-haul, nafla-h., nára-h., etc.: the passage höll við hýrugi, Hm. 138, is no doubt corrupt for við haulvi hýrugi, or hýrugi við haul, i. e. sparred eye (ergot of eye) against hernia:—the sense is clear, though the exact wording is not; the whole verse is a rude old medic. receipt, and the explanation of this passage as given by translators and commentators is no doubt erroneous.

Dan. isse], the skull, cranium, Vpm. 21, Gm. 40, Grág. ii. 11, Fb. i. 235, ii. 79, Eg. 769, 770, Nj. 253, Landn. 51, passim. compens: hausa-kljúfr, m. skull-cleaver, a nickname, Orkn. hausa-mót, m. pl. sutures of the skull, Fas. iii. 214. haus-brot, n. skull-fracture, Bs. ii. 18. haus-fastr, adj. seated in the skull, Bs. i. 641. haus-filla, u, f. 'skull-film', scalp, Tristr. 3. haus-kúpa, u, f. 'skull-basin', skull. haus-akel, f. skull shell, (Germ. birnebeale): in the Icel. II. the head, of beasts, fishes, pork-hauss, hross-h., hunds-h., nauts-h.; of men only as in contempt = blockhead.

HAUST, n.; that this word was originally masc. (as vetr, sumarr) is seen from the other Teut. idioms, as also the Norse form haustar- (for haust), which occurs in haustar-tími, Stj. 14, and haustar-daggr, D. N. (Fr.), = haust-tími, haust-daggr; [A.S. berfest; Engl. barvest; O.H.G. berbiut; Germ. berbiut; Dan. bøst = barvest; Swed. bøst: haust is in Icel. only used in a metaph. sense]:—autumn (barvest season), for the extension of that season see Edda 103, Nj. 9, 168, Fb. ii. 185, passim. compens: haust-blót, n. a sacrificial feast in autumn, Eg. 5. haust-boð, n. an autumn feast, Gisl. 27, Fb. i. 302, Ld. 194, þorfr. H. (Sighvat); at há hverju (hverri), Hervar. (in a verse).

(Kristni S.) passim. II. poet. a wolf, either metaph. from heiðingi, or from heiðr, one who lives on beats and wildernesses, Edda (Gl.), Akv. 8; it occurs besides twice or thrice in poems of the time of king Harald Harðráði, 11th century.

heiðingligr, adj. beatben, Fms. i. 137, passim.

HEIÐINN, adj. [A. S. bæðen; Engl. beatben; O. H. G. beidan; Germ. beide and beidnisch; Dan. bedensk; this word is prob. derived not from heiðr, a beat, but from Gr. διδωκε as used in the N. T.; Ulf. in a single passage, Mark vii. 26, renders γυνή Ελληνίς by qino baiþno; it is even possible that the eccl. paganus, which, according to Du Cange, only appears after A. D. 365, may be merely a translation of the Teutonic word under the notion that baiþan was derived from baiþi = a beat, open country (Gr. ἀγρός, Lat. pagus); then, as baiþi was pronounced much like ðvas, the true etymology of heiðinn was lost; and so the long vowel and the aspirated initial may be accounted for. To the worshippers of Thor and Odin the name beatben was unknown; Christians were the first that used the word, and we meet with it first in Hkm. of Eyvind, who speaks of heiðin goð, beatben gods; heiðinn stallr, a beatben altar, Kristni S., by the missionary Þorvald, A. D. 982; it is also used by Hallfræd and Sighvat; heiðinn dómr, beatbend, Sighvat; heiðnar stjórnur, beatben stars, Sól.; the verse in Ísl. ii. 50 is spurious (as are all the verses of that Saga); so also the verses in Landn. 84 (Hb.), and in Berghvía-þáttur, where the word heiðinn is put into the mouth of a ghost and a giant, in songs which are merely a poetical fiction of later times. The word heiðingi for wolf is curious; probably it is merely a metaph. phrase from heiðinn, gentilis, and if so, it gives an additional evidence to the age of the poem Atla-kviða; which poem, from its nickname the 'Greenlandish,' cannot be older than the discovery of Greenland, A. D. 985]: beatben, gentilis, ethnics, the Sagas passim, esp. Nj. ch. 101–106, Kristni S., Ó. T., Ó. H., etc.; a child not christened was in olden times called beatben, N. G. L. i. 340; heidit morð, the murder of an infant not christened, 339; in mod. Icel. usage, a boy or girl before confirmation is called beatben; this improper use of the word is caused by a confusion between baptism and confirmation: so in Norway a woman between child-birth and churching is called heathen (Ivar Aasen).

as Fr. sire, Engl. sir, see the Sagas passim;

I. as a title; in A. D.

1277 knights and barons were created in Norway, to whom the title of Herra was given; Herra Rafn, Herra Þorvarðr, Herra Sturla, etc., Áma S., Laur. S., Ann. passim: the bishops and abbots were also so styled, e. g. Herra Arngrim (an abbot), Bs. ii. After the Reformation, Herra became an integral part of the style of bishops, as Sira of priests, Herra Guðbrandr, Herra Þorlákkr, Herra Oddr, etc., and can only be applied to the Christian name; cp. the ditty in which the old woman addresses the bishop by Sira, and is rebuked for her rudeness, Sælir verid þér, Sira minn, | sagða eg við Biskupinn; | ansaði mér þá aptr hinn, | þú áttir að kall' ann Herra þinn. In mod. usage Herra is often applied to any person whatever, but only in writing; for in conversation the lcel. has no equivalent to the Engl. Mr. or Germ. Herr, and a person is simply addressed by his name or other title, Sira if a clergyman, and the like. In the N. T. dróttinn, herra, and lávörðr (from Engl.) are used indiscriminately.

II. COMPOU: herra-dómr, m. dominion, lordship, Bs. i. 728, Fb. i. 81; yðarr h. in addressing, as your lordship in Engl., D. N. passim. herra-dæmi, n. = herraðómr, H. HERSIR, m. [akin to hérað and herr], a chief, lord, the political name of the Norse chiefs of the earliest age, esp. before the time of Harold Fairhair and the settlement of Iceland: respecting the office and authority of the old hersir the records are scanty, as they chiefly belonged to the prehistorical time; they were probably not liegemen, but resembled the goðar (vide goði) of the old lcel. Commonwealth, being a kind of patriarchal and hereditary chiefs: in this matter the old *Landnám*s is our chief source of information;—Björn Bona hét herrsir ágætr í Noregi, son Veðr-Grims herrsir í Sogni, móðir Grims var Hervör dóttir þorgerðar Eylaugs-dóttur herrsir ór Sogni, Landn. 39; Arinbjörn h. ór Fjörðum, 66; Ási h., 76, 303, and another of the same name, 109; Ketill Veðr h. af Hringaríki, 94; Hrólfr h. af Ögðum, 48, 126; Ketill Raumr hét h. ágætr í Raumsdal, 173; Gormr h. ágætr í Svíþjóð, 195; Grímr h., 204; Þorsteinn Hólfr h. á Hörðalandi, 228; Þórir Hauknefr h., 237; Úlfir Gildir h. á þelamork, 292; Veðr-Ormr h., 314; Arinbjörn h., Eg. Ad. 3; Vigfúss h. af Vörs, Glúm.; Klyppr h. á Hörðalandi, Fb. i. 19; Dala-Guðbrandr h., O. H. 106; Björn h. á Örlandi, Eg. 154; Þórir h. í Fjörðum, 155, cp. Rm. 36; hann var sem konungr væri yfir Dölnum, ok var þó h. at nafni. O. H. l. c., cp. Fb. i. 23; herrsir hafa verið fyrri frændr minir, ok vil ek ekki bera herra nafn en þeir, Fms. i. 299: it is also prob. that by ágætr and göfugr (q. v.) the *Landnám*s means a herrsir. At the time of Harold Fairhair the old herrsir gradually became liegemen (lendir menn) and were ranked below a jarl (earl), but above a höldr (yeoman), the scale being konungr, jarl, hersir, höldr, búandi, see the record in Hkr. i. 80 (Har. S. Hárf. ch. 6), as also Edda 93; the name then becomes rare, except that herrsir and lendr maðr are now and then used indiscriminately, heita þeir herrsir eða lendir menn, Edda l. c. The old Norse herrsir were no doubt the prototype of the barons of Normandy and Norman England. HINN, HIN, HIT, the article, an enclitic, which therefore can never serve as an accented syllable in a verse, either as rhyme or in alliteration. In good old MSS. (e. g. Cod. Reg. of Sæm.) it is hardly ever spelt with the aspirate, but is written inn, in, it or ið, or enn, an, et or eð, and thus distinguished from the demonstr. pron. hinna; but in the Editions the prob. spurious aspirate has been generally prefixed: an indecl. inu or hinu occurs often in later MSS. of the 14th century, e. g. the Fb.; but as it has not been heard of since and is unknown in the modern language, it simply seems to be a Norwegianism, thus, inu sönnu orð, Th. 2; hinna fyrri biskupa (gen. pl.), H. B. When there was no adjective the article became a suffix to the noun (see Gramm. pp. xix, xx), a usage common even in early prose, but extremely rare in poetry; the reason is, not that the poems were composed before the suffixed article had come into use, but that the metres themselves in which all the old poems were composed are older than that usage, and are not well adapted to it, so that the absence of the article became traditional. The old poem Harbarðsljóð makes an exception, no doubt not from being later than all other poems, but from being composed in a peculiar metre, half verse and half prose; thus in that single poem alone there are nearly twenty instances, or about twice or thrice as many as in all the other poems together:—váginn, Hbl. 2, 13, 15; sundit, 1, 3, 8, 13; verðinum, 4; eikjunni, 7; skipit, id.; stöðna, landit, id.; leiðina, 55; höfuðit, 15; bátinum, 53; veggins, stokksins, steinsins, 56; matrinn, 3; other solitary instances are, goðin áll, Vsp. 27 (prob. somewhat corrupt); eiki-köstinn, Gh. 20; vömmín vár, Ls. 52.

II. in prose, old and modern, the suffixed article occurs at every step; only one or two instances are worth noticing as peculiar to the Icelandic:

1. as vocative in addressing; konan, O woman! mjöðnannan, id., Sighvat (in a verse of A. D. 1018, and so in mod. usage); elskan! hjartað! heillin!

ástin, my love! dear! heart! þursinn! Fas. i. 385; hundarnir! — á skóva, Od. xxii. 35; also with another word, barnið gott, good child! þrúðna- þussinn, thou monster giant! Midgarðs-ormrinn! Fas. i. 373.

2. esp. if with a possessive adjective following, as in Gr. οὐμός, τοῦμός, τὸμός, etc.; elskan mín, ástin mín, hjartað mitt, goðrinn minn! hér er nú ástin mín, here is my darling! Sturl. ii. 78, of a father presenting a darling child to a friend; and so in mod. usage: at abuse, hundrinn þinn, thou dog! Ísl. ii. 176; þjófrinn þinn! Fms. vii. 127; dyðrillinn þinn! ii. 279; hundinn þinn! vi. 323; this use is not confined to the vocative, e. g. konan mín biðr að heilsa, my wife (kona mín is never used); maðrinn minn, my husband; biðdu foreldrana þína (ask thy parents) að lofa þér að fara; augun hans, his eyes, Pass. 24. 4; hugrinn vor og hjartað sé, our mind and heart (cp. Gr. τῷ ἡμῶν θυμῷ), 43. 5; svo hjartað bæði og málið mitt mikli samþuga nafnið þitt, 10. 7; gef þú að móður-málið mitt, 35. 9; bókin mín, my favourite book, my own book; as also, fáðu mér hattinn minn, vellingana mína, skóna mína, gefu mér þá, gloves, shoes; tungan í þér, augun í þér, thy tongue, thy eyes; höfuðið á mér, fætrir á mér, my head, my feet; hendmar á þér ('á mér, á þér' are here equivalent to a possessive, see p. 37, C. IV), thy hands, cp. Homer, τὰ ἐξ ὤμων; hestana þína, Gr. ἵππους τοῦ σού; similar is the instance, vömmín vár, the sins of ours, Ls. 52; this may be a remnant of a time when the article was used separately, even with an indefinite adjective.

3. a double article, one suffixed to the noun and the other prefixed to the word in apposition; hildin sú in Danska, Fms. vi. 323; þau in stóru skipin, viii. 384 and passim; again, when a noun is put in the genitive after another noun the former has no article; as the Engl. phrase 'the fish of the sea and the fowl of the air' is in Icel. 'fiskar sjávarins og fuglar loftans'; but this belongs to the syntax; see also Grimm's D. G. iv. 432.

O. SPECIAL CHANGES, in mod. usage:

I. the demonstr. pron. sá, sú, það has in speech generally taken the place of inn, in, it; thus, sá gamli maðr, sú gamla kona, það gamla skáld; sometimes the article is dropped altogether, e. g. á fimta degi, on the fifth day (= á enum fimta degi); á sömu stundu, in the same hour; even in old writers this is found, með sömu ætlan, Bt. i. 289; á níundu tíð dags, Stj. 41, (but rarely); yet the old form is often retained in writing.

II. in case A. II. the article may be dropped; þann gamla mann, þá gömlu konu, það gamla skáld, þú armi, etc.; sá ráða-góði, sá goðum-liki, sá ágæti Odysseifr, sú vitra Penelopa, sá Jarðkringjandi Pósidon, Od. passim (in Dr. Egilsson's translation).

III. in case A. III. 1. the article is also dropped, Knútr Ríki, Haraldr Hárfagri; even old writers (esp. in later vellums) omitted it now and then, Hálfán Svarta, Fms. i. 1; Haraldr Grænski, 90; Haraldr Hárfagri, 192; Ottarr ungi, Hdl.; even in the Szm. Cod. Reg., Völsungr ungi, Skv. 3. 1, 3.

IV. in case A. III. 2. the pronouns sá, sú, það, and hinn, hin, hit may be used indiscriminately, although the former is more usual.

V. lastly, in case B. the suffixed article has gained ground, and is in modern prose used more freq. than in ancient.

CONCLUSION.—The old poetical language, with the sole exception of a single poem, had no article in the modern and proper sense; in every instance the 'inn, in, it' bears the character of a demonstrative pronoun, preceding an adjective and enhancing and emphasising its sense, like the pers. pron. hann, q. v.; but it is never attached to a single substantive; when the adjective was placed in apposition after a noun, the pronoun came to stand as an enclitic just after the noun, and was sounded as if suffixed thereto; at last it was tacked as an actual suffix to single nouns standing without apposition, and thus the true suffixed article gradually arose, first in speech, then in writing; whereas at the same time the old pronominal enclitic (A. I-III) gradually went out of use, and was either dropped or replaced by the stronger demonstrative pronoun 'sá, sú.'

HINN, HIN, HITT, demonstr. pron., prob. identical in etymology with the preceding word, from which it is however distinguished,

1. by the neut. hitt, Dan. hint; 2. by the initial aspirate, which is never dropped; 3. by being a fully accented pronoun, so that the h can stand as an alliterative letter, e. g. bandar ennar begri | mun ek þinnar geta, Ls.; veitkat ek þitt hvart Heita | þungr ..., Hallfred; Hitt kváð þá Hamðr, etc., Hdm. 23, 25, Korm. 40; Raun er þinn at Heimir | þæ ..., Skáld biðr þins at baldi | þjálm ..., Sighvat, Hkv. Hjórv. 26; [Ulf. jains = iucivos; A. S. geond; Engl. you; Germ. jener.]

HLAUT, f. (not n.); the gender is borne out by the genitive tein hlautar, Vellekla; as also by the dat. hlautinni, Landn. (App.) 336, in an old transcript of the lost vellum Vatnsdýma (see Kjaln. S. l. ii. 403, where hlautinn):—the blood of sacrifice, used for soothsaying; this word is prob. to be derived from hlutr (hlautr), as an abbreviated form, for hlaut-blóð = sanguis sortidicus, and refers to the rite, practised in the heathen age, of enquiring into the future by dipping bunches of chips or twigs into the blood, and shaking them; those twigs were called teinar, hlaut-teinar, hlaut-viðr, blót-spánn, q. v.; the act of shaking was called hrista teina, to shake twigs, Hým. i; kjósa hlautvið, to choose lot chips, Vsp. In Vellekla the true reading is prob. hann (earl Hakon) valdi (from velja, MS. vildi) tein hlautar, meaning the same as kjósa hlautvið in Vsp., an emendation borne out by the words 'felldi blótspán' (Fagrsk. l. c.) in the prose text, which is a paraphrase of the verse; the explanation of the passage in Lex. Poët. is no doubt erroneous. It was also called fella blótspán, see that word, p. 71. The walls of the temple inside and out, the altars, and the worshippers were sprinkled with the blood, the flesh of the slain cattle was to be eaten (whereas the blood was a sacrifice, as well as the means of augury, and was not to be eaten);

this rite is described in Hkr. Hák. S. Góða ch. 16: en blóð þat allt er þar kom af (i. e. from the slain cattle) þá var þat kallat hlaut ok hlaut-bollar þat er blóð þat stóð í, ok hlaut-teinar, þat var svá gort sem stóklar (bunches); með því skyldi fjóða stallana öllu saman, ok svá veggi hofins útan ok innan, ok svá stökkva á mennina; en slátr (the meat) skyldi hafa til mann-fagnaðar: the passages in Eb. ch. 4. p. 6 new Ed., in Kjaln. S. ch. 2, and in Landn. (App.), are derived from the same source as the passage in Hkr., but present a less correct and somewhat impaired text; even the text in Hkr. is not quite clear, esp. the phrase, þat var gort sem stökkull, which prob. means that the hlaut-teinar were bound up in a bunch and used for the sprinkling. The blood-sprinkling mentioned in Exod. xii. 22 illustrates the passage above cited; cp. hleyti, hljóta, and hlutr.

HLEBRI, a, m. or hlóri, but hleði in Korm. 10, Isl. ii. 113; that hleri or hlóri is the better form is borne out by the mod. usage as well as by the derived hler and hlera: —a shutter or door for bedrooms and closets in old dwellings, which moved up and down in a groove or rabbet, like windows in Engl. dwellings, and locked into the threshold: the passage in Korm. (blōt, not blot); the Ormul. spells lott with a short vowel, as is the case also in Icel., Dan., Swed., and Engl.]

A. A lot; the ceremony of drawing lots was like that described in Homer; each party marked his lot (skera or marka hluti), which was then thrown into a sheet (lap of a garment, bera or leggja hluti í skaut), and a third person came and drew a lot out; (it was not thrown out by shaking.) This drawing of lots was originally a sacred ceremony; it was used in sacrifices (by way of augury, see below), in sharing booty or an inheritance; in law the order in which suits came on was decided by lot, in banquets the seats of honour were so assigned (e. g. who was to sit next to the daughter of the house), etc. Many words in the language refer to this old rite, and the ceremony is thus described: en hluti skyldi skera ok í skaut bera, Fms. vii. 140; kom þat á samt með þeim at hluti skyldi bera í skaut, ... skyldi því hvárir-veggju una sem hlutr segði, vóru þá hlutir markaðir; þá mælti Norðbríkt til Gyrgis: 'lát mik sjá hversu þú markar þinn hlut at vit markim eigi báðir einn veg'; hann gerði svá; síðan markaði Norðbríkt sinn hlut, ok kastaði í skaut ok svá báðir þeir; síðan gekk sá maðr at er til (upp, v. l.) skyldi taka, ok tók upp annan hlutinn milli fingra sér ...; síðan var at hugat þeim hlutinum ok kenndu þar allir mark Gyrgis, vii. 136, 137; hvern maðr er sök hefir með at fara í dóm, þá skal hlut bera í skaut, einn, þótt hann hafi fleiri sakar í dóm þann, hvern maðr skal merkja hlut sinn ok bera alla saman í skaut, ok skal maðr taka fjóra hluti sinn upp, Grág. i. 37; bjóða til hlutfalla ok bera þar hluti í skaut, 74; menn báru þá hluti sína í skaut ok tók jarlinn upp; ... svá sagði hlutr til, at Egill skyldi sitja hjá jarls-dóttur um kveldit, Eg. 247; en þá er tólfmenningr var skipaðr til at sitja ok settir hlutir til hvers næst skyldi sitja Ástríði, dóttur Vigfúss bersis, ok hlaut Eyjólfur ávalt at sitja hjá henni, Glúm. 331; nú ræða þeir um goðorðit ok verða eigi ástáttir, vildi hver sinn hlut (case) fram draga; þá leggja þeir hluti í skaut, ok kom jafnan upp hlutr Silfra, Fs. 68; þeir lögðu hluti á, ok hlaut þróendr, Farr.

II. the hlutir were talismans or little images, which people used to wear on their persons; síðan tekr jarl skálar (scales) góðar ... ok fylgðu tvaum met (weights), annat af gulli en annat af silfri; þar var á líkon-skja manns, ok hétu þat hlutar (hlotar sem forn-mönnum var títt at hafa, add. in v. l.), ok fylgði sú náttúra, at þá er jarl lagði þá í skálar, ok kvað á hyat hvárt skyldi merkja, ok ef sá kom upp (turned up) er hann vildi, þá breytti sá í skálinni svá at varð glámm af. Jarl gaf Einari skálar, ok varð hann gláðr við ok síðan kalladr Einarr Skálarglam, Jónsv. S. (1824) 37, 38; hlutr er hörfinn ór þúsi þinum sá er Haraldr konungr gaf þér í Hafnarði, ok er hann nú kominn í holt þat er þú munt byggja, ok er á hlutum markaðr Freyr af silfri, Fs. 19; ok vill Freyr þar láta sinn hlut niðr koma er hann vill sitt sæmdar-sæti setja, 22; cp. Landn., hann sendi Finna tvá í hamföllum til Íslands eptir hlut sinn, 174; hann hefir líkneski þórs í þungi sínum af tönn göt ...; nú fannsk engi sá 'hlutr' í hans valdi, Fs. 97: the 'gumpa heillir' or talismans, mentioned in Sömp., were prob. hlutir.

The game is best described in Friðp. S. ch. 3, and in one of the riddles in Hervar. S. (where however the rhymed replies are not genuine): 'Who are the maids that fight about their unarmed lord, the dark all day defending, but the fair slaying?' The players were two, as in chess; there was only one king (hnefi), here called the 'unarmed lord'; the pieces (töflur) were white and red, the white attacking, the red defending the hnefi; þat er hnestafl, enar dókkri verja hnefann, en hinar hvítari sækja, Fas. i. 474; þat er húninn í hnestafl, 476: pieces made of silver are recorded in Gullp. S., of walrus-bone in Krók. l. c. For the general use of this game, cp. the dialogue between the two brother kings, Mork. l. c.—teflig hnestafl betr, era þat minna vert en að þitt; Sigurðr Ormr í auga ok Hvítserkr hvati sitja at hnestafl, Fas. i. 284; whenever tafl is mentioned, this particular game seems to be understood, e. g. the gullnar töflur and tefidu í túni of the Vsp.; cp. earl Rógnvald's verse in Orkn. ch. 61; and the fatal game of chess between king Canute and earl Ulf in Roeskilde A. D. 1027 was probably a hnestafl. We see from Mork. l. c. that it was still played at the beginning of the 12th century, but in after times it was superseded by the true chess (skák); both games were probably of the same origin. compds: hnefa-tafl, u, f. or hnef-töfl, f. or hnettöfl, f., Fas. i. 463, v. l., or hnettöfla, u, f. the piece of the hnefi. hólm-ganga, u, f. 'holm-gang, holm-going,' a duel or wager of battle fought on an islet or 'holm,' which with the ancients was a kind of last appeal or ordeal; and wherever a Thing (parliament) was held, a place was appointed for the wager of battle, as the holm in the Axe River in the alþingi. The hólm-ganga differed from the plain einvigi or duel, as being accompanied by rites and governed by rules, whilst the latter was not,—þvíat á hólm-göngu er vandhæfi en alls eigi á einvigi, Korm. 84. The ancient Icel. Sagas abound in wagers of battle, chiefly the Korm. S. ch. 10 and passim: some champions were nicknamed from the custom, e.g. Hólm-göngu-Bersi (Korm. S.), Hólm-göngu-Starr, Hólm-göngu-Máni, Hólm-göngu-Hrafn, Landn. About A.D. 1006 (see Timatal), the hólm-ganga was abolished by law in the parliament, on account of the unhappy feud between Gunnlaug Snake-tongue and Skald-Hrafn, Gunnl. S. ch. 11, cp. Valla L. ch. 5 (þá vóru af tekin hólm-göngu-lög öll ok hólm-göngur), referring to about A.D. 1010; a single instance however of a challenge in the north of Icel. is recorded after this date (about the year 1030–1040), but it was not accepted (Lv. S. ch. 30); the wager in Lv. ch. 17 was previous (though only by a few years) to the fight between Gunnlaug and Ragn. It is curious that Jón Egilsson, in his Lives of Bishops (written about A.D. 1600, Bisk. Ann. ch. 36, Safn i. 64), mentions a wager of battle between the parties of the two bishops, Jón Arason and Ögmund, on the old holm in the Axe River A.D. 1529; but the whole is evidently a mere reproduction of the tale of the Horatii in Livy. Maurer thinks that the two important acts of legislation, the institution of the Fifth Court in 1004 and the abolition of the ordeal of hólm-ganga a few years later, are closely connected, as the institution of the new court of appeal made the decision by battle superfluous. In Norway, if we are to believe Grett. S. ch. 21 (þá tók Eirekr af allar hólm-göngur í Noregi), the hólm-göngur were abolished about the year 1012. It is very likely that the tournaments of the Norman age, fought in lists between two sets of champions, sprang from the heathen hólm-ganga, though this was always a single combat. For separate cases see the Sagas, Korm. S. l. c., Gunnl. S. l. c., Eg. ch. 57, 67, Nj. ch. 24, 60, Landn. 2. ch. 13, 3. ch. 7, Rd. ch. 1, 19, Gisl. init., Glúm. ch. 4, Valla L. l. c., Halfr. S. ch. 10. A curious kind of duel in a tub is recorded in Flóam. S. ch. 17, called kerganga, perhaps akin to the mod. Swed. fight in a belt. For England see Sir Edmund Head's interesting notes to Glúm. COMPS: hólm-göngu-boð, n. challenging to h., Valla L. 214, Fas. ii. 475. hólm-göngu-lög, n. pl. the law, rules of h., Korm. 86, Valla L. 213. hólm-göngu-maðr, m. a champion of h., Korm. 54, Fms. i. 149. hólm-göngu-staðr, m. a place where h. is fought, Fms. i. 150. hólm-göngu-sverð, n. a sword used in h., Fas. i. 515.

Þjóðs. ii. 553, which throw a light on the passage in Hbl. 48 (Sif á hó heima), insinuating that Thor busied himself with cooking and dairy-work. HREINN, m. [the word is prob. of Finnish origin. From the words of king Alfred, (þa deor he hātað hrānas, Orosius i. 1, § 15, Bosworth's Ed.), it seems that the king knew the name only from Othhere's tale; and when Egil in his poem on king Athelstān (if the verse be genuine) calls Northern England hreinbraut, the reindeers' track, the phrase is prob. merely poet. for a wilderness. There is however a curious passage in Orkn. (448) where the hunting of reindeer in Caithness is recorded; the Icel. text is here only preserved in a single MS.; but though the Danish translation in Stockholm (of the year 1615) has the same reading, it is probably only a mistake of the Saga; for it is not likely that the Norsemen carried reindeer across the sea; the present breed was introduced into Icel. by the government only a century ago]:—a reindeer, Hm. 89, K. þ. HREPPR, m.:—this word remains in 'the Rape of Bramber' in Sussex, and is undoubtedly Scandinavian, being probably derived, as Pal Vidalin suggested, from hreppa, and thus originally meaning a share, allotment; it may be that the proper name Hrappur (Landn.) is akin (= a yeoman, master of a Rape?); for the bad sense of that name (= a traitor) is a metonymy, borrowed from the person of that name in the Njála. After the introduction of Christianity, all Icel. was, for the maintenance of the poor, divided into poor-law districts called hreppar, which still exist, being in most cases, though not always, identical with the sókn or parish; and it is remarkable that the district round the Bishop's seat at Skálholt bears the local name Hreppar, indicating that this division had the Bishop's house as its nucleus. The occurrence therefore of this name in the Landn. is an anachronism; as probably are also the few instances in which hreppr is used as an appellative in records of the heathen age, e.g. Lv. i. c. It is not known when the division into Rapes took place; perhaps it took place gradually during the 11th century; vera á hrepp, koma á hreppinn, to be or become a pauper. In the Grágás a special section (and as it seems one of the oldest) is called 'um Hreppa-skil,' Kb. ii. 171–180; 'um Hreppa-lög,' Sb. i. 443–458. Twenty franklins at least constituted a lawful Rape, Kb. ii. 171. (These remarks are partly due to Konrad Maurer.) compos: hreppa-dómur, m. a Rape court, Grág. i. 245, 448. hreppa-lög, n. pl. the laws and rules of a Rape, Grág. i. 443. hreppa-maðr, m. a man from the district Hreppar, Sturl. ii. 248. hreppa-mál, n. hrepp-stofna, u, f. = hreppsfundur, Sturl. i. 185. hrepp-stjóri, a, m. a 'Rape-steerer,' overseer, Jb. 186, Vm. 116: in each Rape in Icel. the best yeoman is chosen as hreppstjóri by the sheriff (amtmaðr) or, as in former days, by the parishioners, but he is not paid; he has, jointly with the parish priest, to manage the business of the Rape, esp. to see to the maintenance of the poor, fix the poor-rate of each franklin, and, as there are no poor-houses, to arrange the distribution of the poor (úmagar) among the parishioners. In the days of the Commonwealth there was a committee of five members, called hreppstjórnarmenn (q. v.), which discharged the duties of the present hreppstjóri; með ráði heima-prents ok hreppstjóra, Vm. 116. This word does not occur in the Grágás, but only after A. D. 1281; for the reading hreppstjóri in the D. I. i. 199 (in a deed supposed to be of A. D. 1150) is only found in a mod. transcript, and the original prob. had hreppstjórnarmenn (pl.)

HUNDRAD, n. pl. hundruð; the form hund- (q. v.) only occurs in a few old compd words: [Goth. bunda, pl.; A. S. bund; O. H. G. bunt; the extended form in Hel. and old Frank. bundered; Germ. bunderi; Dan. bundrede; Swed. bundra; the inflexive syllable is prob. akin to -ræðr in átt-ræðr]:—a hundred; the Scandinavians of the heathen time (and perhaps also all Teutonic people) seem to have known only a duodecimal hundred (= 12 x 10 or 120); at that time 100 was expressed by tíu-tíu, cp. Ulf. taibun-taibund = ten-ten; Pal Vidalin says,—hundrad tólftrætt er samnlega frá heiðni til vor komið, en hið tíræða er líkast að Norðrönd hafi ekki vitað af fyrr en Kristni kom hér og með henni lær-dómr þeirrar aldar, Skýr. s. v. Hundrad (fine): but with the introduction of Christianity came in the decimal hundred, the two being distinguished by adjectives,—tólftrætt hundrad = 120, and tírætt hundrad = 100. But still the old popular duodecimal system continued in almost all matters concerned with economical or civil life, in all law phrases, in trade, exchange, property, value, or the like, and the decimal only in ecclesiastical or scholastic matters (chronology, e. g. lb. ch. 2, 10). At the same time the word in speech and writing was commonly used without any specification of tírætt or tólftrætt, for, as Pal Vidalin remarks, every one acquainted with the language knew which was meant in each case; even at the present time an Icel. farmer counts his flocks and a fisherman his share (hlötr) by the duodecimal system; and everybody knows that a herd or share of one hundred and a half means 120 + 60 = 180. In old writers the popular way of counting is now and then used even in chronology and in computation, e. g. when Ari Frode (lb. ch. 4) states that the year consists of three hundred and four days (meaning 364); the census of franklins given by the same writer (where the phrase is hundruð heil = whole or full bundreds) is doubtless reckoned by duodecimal, not decimal hundreds. lb. ch. 10; and in the census of priests and churches taken by bishop Paul (about A. D. 1200) 'tíráð' is expressively added, lest duodecimal hundreds should be understood, Bs. i. 136. The Landn. (at end) contains a statement (from Ari?) that Iceland continued pagan for about a hundred years, i. e. from about 874–997 A. D. In the preface to Ólafis S., Snorri states that two duodecimal hundreds (tvau hundruð tólftræð) elapsed from the first colonisation of Iceland before historical writing began (i. e. from about A. D. 874–1115): levies of ships and troops are in the laws and Sagas counted by duodecimal hundreds, e. g. the body-guard of king Olave consisted of a hundred hús-men, sixty house-carles and sixty guests, in all 'two hundred' men, i. e. 240, Mork. 126; the sons of earl Sigrúð-Harald had a hundred men, of whom eighty were billeted out and forty returned, Fms. xi. 88, 89; hálf hundrad, a half hundred = sixty, Mork. i. c. 2. a division of troops = 120; hundrad-slokkir, Fms. vi. (in a verse). II. in indef. sense, hundreds, a host, countless number, see hund-, as also in the adverb. phrase, hundroðum, by hundreds (indefinitely), Fms. vi. 407. Þidr. 275, 524: in mod. usage as adjective and indecl., except the pl. in -oð, thus hundroð ásaðum, Dipl. iv. 10.

B. As value, a hundred, i. e. a hundred and twenty ells of the stuff wadmal, and then simply value to that amount (as a pound sterling in English). All property, real as well as personal, is even at present in Iceland taxed by hundreds; thus an estate is a 'twenty, sixty, hundred' estate; a franklin gives his tithable property as amounting to so and so many hundreds. As for the absolute value of a hundred, a few statements are sufficient, thus e. g. a milk cow, or six ewes with lambs, counts for a hundred, and a hundred and a kúgildi (cow's value) are equal: the charge for the alimentation of a pauper for twelve months was in the law (Jb. 165) fixed to four hundred and a half for a male person, but three hundred and a half for a female; cp. also the phrase, það er ekki hundrad í hætunni, there is no hundred at stake, no great risk! In olden times a double standard was used,—the wool or wadmal standard, called hundrad talið = a hundred by tale, i. e. a hundred and twenty ells as stated above, and a silver standard, called hundrad vegit, a hundred by weight, or hundrad silfrs, a hundred in silver, amounting to two marks and a half = twenty ounces = sixty örtugar; but how the name hundred came to be applied to it is not certain, unless half an örtug was taken as the unit. It is probable that originally both standards were identical, which is denoted by the phrase, sex álfa eyrir, six ells to an ounce, or a hundred and twenty ells equal to twenty ounces (i. e. wadmal and silver at par); but according as the silver coinage was debased, the phrases varied between nine, ten, eleven, twelve ells to an ounce (N. G. L. i. 80, 81, 387, 390, passim), which denote bad silver; whereas the phrase 'three ells to an ounce' (þriggja álfa eyrir, Sturl. i. 163, passim, or a hundred in wadmal equal to half a hundred in silver) must refer either to a double ell or to silver twice as pure: the passage in Grág. i. 500 is somewhat obscure, as also Rd. 233: the words vegin, silfrs, or talin are often added, but in most cases no specification is given, and the context must shew which of the two standards is there meant; the wool standard is the usual one, but in cases of wergild the silver standard seems always to be understood; thus a single wergild (the fine for a man's life) was one hundred, Njála passim. 2. the phrases, hundrad fritt, a hundred paid in cattle, Finnb. 226; tólf hundrad mörund, twelve hundred in dark striped wadmal, Nj. 225; hundrad í búsgögnum ok í húsbáningi, Vm. 65; hundrad-grípr, hestr, hross, kapall, hvila, sæng, rekkja, psaltari, etc., a beast, a horse, a bed, etc., of a hundred's value, Am. 2, 10, Vm. 25, 39, 60, 153, Jm. 3, 30; hundrad-úmagi, a person whose maintenance costs a hundred, Vm. 156; hundrad virði, a hundred's value, 68. For references see the Sagas and laws passim, and for more information see Mr. Dasent's Essay in Burnt Njal.

C. A hundred, a political division which in olden times was common to all Teut. nations, but is most freq. in old Swedish laws, where several hundreds made a hérað or shire; cp. the A. S. and Engl. hundred, Du Cange hundredum; old Germ. bundert, see Grimm's Rechts Alterthümer; the centum pagi of Caesar, Bell. Gall. iv. ch. 1, is probably the Roman writer's misconception of the Teut. division of land into hundreds; this is also the case with Tacit. Germ. ch. 12: cp. the Swed. local names Fjadrunda-land, Áttundaland, and Tiunda-land, qs. Fjadr-hunda land, Átt-hunda land, Tiunda land, i. e. a combination of four, eight, ten hundreds. The original meaning was probably a community of a hundred and twenty franklins or captains. This division is not found in Iceland.

G. L. i. 59. 3. a piece in a game, prob. from its cone-like shape: from the phrase, verpa húnun, to cast (throw) the piece 'hún,' it seems to follow that this game was either similar to the Gr. δωρον or rather to the mod. nine pins; þeir í Haralds túni húnun verpa, Hornklofi, Fagrsk. 5 (in a verse); in Rm. 32 the 'hundur verpa' is no doubt a false reading for 'húnun verpa'; the riddle in Hervar. S., (where the answer is, þat er húninn í hneftaflí), is obscure and corrupt in the text, for the hneftaflí or hneftaflí (q. v.) was quite a different game.

HVERN or HVORN, f. [pronced. kvörn or kvörn, but distinction is to be made between kvörn, mola, and hvörn, carebrum; for in the latter word b is the true initial, as is shewn by comparison with Ulf. hvairnei = spavler, Mark xv. 22; Scot. barns; Germ. born; Swed. bjerna; Dan. bjerne, which stand in the same relation to hvörn as hjól to hvel]—the two boat-shaped scapula bones embedded in a fish's brains. These bones, as well as shells, are in Icel. collected and used by children in the game of guessing, as nuts etc. are in England; hann lauk þá upp höfuðskeljum mannanna, og tók hnefa-fylli úr hverju höfði og hugði vandliga að; eintómar hvarnir, og ekki nema tvær í þorik-kindinni, Fjölhrir (1845) 52. hvarnar-skoljar, f. pl. = hvarnir.

hvorna, u. f. [hverr, m.], a pan, basin, Nikd. 18.

hvernig, qs. hvernveg, [see hverr], interrog. direct and indirect; the forms vary, hvernog or hvernig, Eg. 19 A, 106, 123, 292, 394, Hkr. i. 170, 287, Korm. 130, 148, Glúm. 327, Band. 18 new Ed., passim; hvernog or hvernig, Orkn. 83 (v. l.), Hkr. i. 120, 347, Al. 63, 65, and passim in old MSS.; the mod. form is hvernin, pronced. hvurninn or kvurninn, qs. hvernveginn, from vegr with the article, which form is also now and then found in old MSS., Fs. 105 (MS. Arna-Magn. 132), Bs. Hungrv. passim, as also later MSS.:—how? in what way? the references passim.

HVERR, m., pl. hverar: I. a cauldron, boiler; hver kringlóttaf eiri, Stj. 564; heyrði til höfðu er þórr bar hverinn, Skálda 168, Hym. 1, 3, 5, 9, 13, 27, 33, 34, 36, 39 (of a boiler); hefia af hvera, Gm. 42,—mod. taka ofan pottinn; in Gkv. 3, 6, 9, 10, ketill and hver are synonymous: hver-gætir, m. a cauldron-keeper, cook, Am. 58; hvera-lundr, m. a cauldron groove, Vsp. 39; Hver-gelmir, m. local name of the northern Tartarus, the abyss, Edda. II. metaph. in volcanic Icel. this word was taken to express the hot springs, and it is so used to the present day (in pl. often hverir), Sd. 191, Grett. 141 (hverar), Bs. i. 322, Ann. 1294, and freq. in local names. In the west the largest hverar are those in Reykjahólar, Eggert Ítin. 381; in the north the Reykja-hver; Hvera-vellir in the wilderness Kjöl. 637; Reykjadal-hverar, among which the largest is the Uxa-hver, and Baðstofu-hver, 640, 641. In the east there are only a few, see Ítin. 798; whereas the south is very rich in such springs, especially the neighbourhood of Haukadal (Geysir, Strokkr), see Ann. 1294; Grafar-hver, 890; Reykjanes-hverar, 895, (whence Hver-hólmur, the name of a holm); the springs in Krisuvík, 897; the hverar in Reykja-holt and Reykja-dal; they are found even in glaciers, as in Torfa-jökull, 766.

hverar-fuglar, m. pl. fabulous birds, Eggert Ítin. 890. hvera-bolla, u. f. = hverahrúðr, Ítin. 142. hvera-brúðr, m. the topbus or tuf-stone deposited by hot springs, Ítin. 145.

hverar-leir, m. a kind of lime, Ítin. 127. hvera-slý, n. the soft pulp deposited by hot springs, Ítin. 109.

hverar-steinar, m. pl. a kind of tuf-stone, Ítin. 660. hvera-vain, n. water from a hver. For old dried up hverar see Ítin. 295; cp. also the remarks s. v. Geysir and Ann. 1294. From hvera-lundr in Vsp. an Icel. origin of this poem is suggested by Prof. Bergmann in his Poèmes Islandaises, Paris 1838, p. 183, as the verse seems to refer to volcanic agencies.

HVERR, pron. interrog. and indef.; at the present day pronced. hvur, with a throughout, and in mod. printed books usually spelt hvör, a form no doubt derived from the dual hvárr (hvorr), used in a plur. sense: for its declension, see Gramm. p. xxi; an acc. hverjan, Hym. 39; hverjan morgin, Vsp. 22, Fb. ii. 71 (in a verse); hverjan dag, Vpm. 11, 18, 23, 41, Gm. 8, 14, 20, 39; hverjan veg, Vpm. 18; whence the contracted form hvörn. [The Gothic has a threefold interrog. pron., a sing. hwaz, hwa, hwa; a dual, hwajar; and a plur. hwarjis, hwarja, hwarjata. To the first of these pronouns answers the old Icel. form hvar, A. S. hwa, Scot. wha; Engl. who, Swed. ho, Dan. hvo, cp. Lat. quis; but this pronoun is defective, and remains only in the neut. hvæt, q. v., Ulf. hwa, A. S. hwæt, Engl. what, Germ. was, Dan.-Swed. hvad, Lat. quid: the dat. masc. hveim is obsolete, Goth. hwamme, Engl. whom, Dan. hvem: the dat. hvi (see hvat II, III); a nom. masc. hvar (hva-r) seems to be used a few times in old MSS. (e. g. Kb. of the Grágas), but it is uncertain, as the word is usually abbreviated hír or hí: a gen. sing. hves (Goth. hwes, North. E. whese) occurs, hves lengra, how much farther? Hom. (St.) 50; til hves, to what? 65; possibly the hw. Aey. hós, Ls. 33, is a remnant of the old gen. To the Goth. dual answers the Icel. hvárr (hvaðarr), q. v. To the Goth. plur. answers the Icel. hverr, with characteristic j, which is used in sing. and plur. alike. In the neut. sing. the two forms, hvat and hvert, are distinguished thus, that hvat (hvað) is interrog., hvert indef., e. g. hvað barn, what bairn? but hvert barn, every bairn.]

B. Eccl. use of the word white: I. at the introduction of Christianity, neophytes in the week after their baptism used to wear white garments, called hvíta-váðir, f. pl. white weeds, as a symbol of baptism cleansing from sin and being a new birth; a neophyte was called hvít-váðungr, m. a 'white-weedling', one dressed in white weeds, Niðst. 111; the Sagas contain many touching episodes of neophytes, esp. such as were baptized in old age, and died whilst in the white weeds; þat er sögn flestra manna at Kjartan hafi þann dag görzt handgenginn Ólafi konungi er hann var færdr ór hvíta-váðum ok þeir Bolli báðir, Ld. ch. 40; síðan hafði konungr þá í bóði sínu ok veitti þeim eina virðuligustu veizla meðan þeir vóru í hvítaváðum, ok lét kenna þeim heilög fræði, Fms. i. 230; Glúmr (Viga-Glúmr) var biskupaðr í banasótt af Kol biskupi ok andaðisk í hvítaváðum, Glúmr. 397; Bárðr tók sótt litlu síðar enn hann var skírðr ok andaðisk í hvítaváðum, Fms. ii. 153; Ólafur á Haukagili var skírðr ok andaðisk í hvítaváðum, Fas. (Vd.) 77; var Tóki síðan skírðr af hirðbiskupi Ólafs konungs, ok andaðisk í hvítaváðum, Fb. ii. 138; síðan andaðisk Gestr í hvítaváðum, Bárð. (sub fin.) Sweden, but above all Gothland, remained in great part heathen throughout the whole of the 11th century, after the neighbouring countries Denmark and Norway had become Christian, and so we find in Sweden Runic stones referring to Swedes who had died in the white weeds, some abroad and some at home; sem varð dauðr í hvítaváðum í Danmörku, Baut. 435; hann varð dauðr í Danmörku í hvítaváðum, 610; þeir dó í hvítaváðum, 68; sem dó í hvítaváðum, 271; hann varð dauðr í hvítaváðum, 223, 497. Churches when consecrated used to be dressed out with white; var Kjartan at Borg grafinn, þá var kirkja nývirgð ok í hvítaváðum, Ld. 230.

II. the white garments gave rise to new words and phrases amongst the first generation of northern Christians: 1. Hvíta-Kristr, m. 'White-Crist', was the favourite name of Christ; hafa láti mik heitan Hvíta-Krist at viti eld, ef..., Sighvat; another poet (Edda 91) uses the word; and in prose, dugi þú mér. Hvíta-Kristr, help thou me, White-Crist! Fas. 101; ok þeir er þann síð hafa taka nafn af þeim Guði er þeir trúu á, ok kalliðr er Hvíta-Kristr ok því heita þeir Kristnir, mér er ok sagt at H.

só svá miskunnað, at . . . , Fms. i. 295; en ef ek skal á guð nacquat trúa, hvat er mér þá verra at ek trúa á Hvíta-Krist en á annat guð? O. H? 204; Arnjotr svarar, heyrð hefi ek getið Hvíta-Krists, en þkkr er mér kunnigt um aðhöfn hans eða hvar hann ræðr fyrir, 211; en þó trúi ek á Hvíta-Krist, Fb. ii. 137. 2. the great festivals, Yule (see Ld. ch. 40), Easter and Pentecost, but especially the two latter, were the great seasons for

Kr. Krist, Fb. ii. 1. 37. 2. the great festivals, Yule (see Ld. ch. 40). Easter and Pentecost, but especially the two latter, were the great seasons for christening; in the Roman Catholic church especially Easter, whence in Roman usage the first Sunday after Easter was called Dominica in Albis; but in the northern churches, perhaps owing to the cold weather at Easter time, Pentecost, as the birthday of the church, seems to have been specially appointed for christening and for ordination, see Hungrv. ch. 2, Thom. 318; hence the following week was termed the Holy Week (Helga Vika). Hence, Pentecost derived its name from the white garments, and was called Hvíta-dagar, the White days, i. e. Whitsun-week; frá Páskadegi innum fyrsta skulu vera vikur sjáu til Drottins-dags í Hvítadögum; Drottinsdag í Hvítadögum skulu vér halda seð hinn fyrsta Páskadag, K. þ. K. 102; þváttdag fyrir Hvítadaga = Saturday next before Whitsunday, 126, 138; Páskadag innum fyrsta ok Uppstigningar-dag ok Drottinsdag í Hvítadögum, 112; þá Imbrudaga er um Hvítadaga verða, 126; vóru aftelnir tveir dagar í Hvítadögum, Bs. i. 420; um vátit á Hvítadögum, Orkn. 438: Hvítadaga-vika, u. f. White-day week = Whitsun-week, K. þ. K. 126; in sing., þeir kómu at Hvítadegi (= Whitsunday) til Björgynjar, Fms. x. 63, v. l.: Hvítadaga-helgi, f. the White-day feast, Whitsuntide, Fms. viii. 373, xi. 339, Sturl. iii. 206: Hvítadaga-herið, a snow storm during the White days, Ann. 1330: Hvít-Drottins-dagr, u. f. the White Lord's day, i. e. Whitsunday, the northern Dominica in Albis, Rb. 484, Fms. vii. 156, Bs. i. 62, where it refers to the 26th of May, 1056, on which day Ísleif the first bishop of Iceland was consecrated. The name that at last prevailed was Hvíta-sunna, u. f. Whitsun, i. e. White-sun, D. N. ii. 263, 403: Hvítasunna-dagr, m. Whitsunday, Fb. ii. 546, Fms. viii. 63, v. l.: Hvítasunnudags-vika, u. f. Whitsun-week, Fb. ii. 546; Páskaviku, ok Hvítasunnudags-viku, ok þrjár vikur fyrir Júnsvöku, ok svá fyrir Michiáls-messu, N. G. L. i. 150: hvitassunnudagshátið, Thom. 318. As the English was the mother-church of that of Norway and Iceland, the Icelandic eccl. phrases are derived from the English language. See Bingham's Orig. s. vv. White Garments, and Dominica in Albis, where however no reference is given to Icel. writers. In modern Denmark and Norway the old name has been displaced by Pindse, i. e. Pfingsten, derived from the Greek word, whereas in Icel., as in Engl., only the name Hvítasunna is known. In Denmark the people make a practice of thronging to the woods on Whitsun morning to see the rising of the sun, and returning with green branches in their hands, the trees being just in bud at that season.

HÖFUÐ, n., dat. höfði; gen. pl. höfða, dat. höfðum; in Norse MSS. often spelt hafuð, Anecd. 4 (without umlaut); the root-vowel seems in very early times (8th century) to have been a diphthong; thus Bragi uses the rhymes, laufi—hafuði, and rauf—hafuð, Edda; the old ditty with a half rhyme, höfðu vér í hafuði, Hkr. i. 104, would be faulty unless we accept a diphthong in the latter word: in good old MSS. (e. g. Sam. Cod. Reg.) the word is always spelt with u or au, never o, and probably never had a diphthongal sound; the Norse spelling hafuð however points to a short vowel; and later Icel. MSS. spell o or au, e. g. Hb. in Vsp. i. c. It is probable that the short vowel originated in the contracted form, as hafuði sounds hard; [cp. Goth. bauþip; A. S. beafod; Engl. bead; Hel. bóbid; O. H. G. boupit; mid. H. G. boubet; mod. G. baupt; Dan. boued; Swed. buvud; Osmul. bafedd (the single f marks a preceding long vowel)]; thus all old Teut. languages except the Icel. agree in the length of the vowel, whereas Lat. caput, Gr. κεφαλή have a short root vowel.]

HÖFUND, m., gen. ar; the masc. inflex. -undr reminds one of the Gothic (Gramm. p. xxxii. B. V); in old writers the word is found only four times, always in the sense of a judge, and referring chiefly to Gothland in Sweden; Höfunder (a mythol. pr. name) var manna vitasir, ok svá réttðæmr, at hann hallaði aldri réttum dómi, ... ok af hans nafni skyldi sá höfundr heita í hverju ríki er mál manna dæmði, Fas. (Hervar. S.) i. 523, cp. 513; as also in Hrólf S. Kraka (referring to Gothland), höfundr einn var þar til settr at skora þetta mál með sannindum, settusk margir í þetta sæti, ok kalladi höfundr öngum sæma, þóir gengr seinast ok sezk hann þegar í stóllinn; höfundr mælti, þér er sætið hæfligast, ok muntu dæmtr til þessarar stjórna, Fas. i. 58; sigr-höfundr, the judge of victory, the Lord of battle, a name given to Odin by Egil, Stor. 21; lastly in Thorodd, skáld eru höfundar allrar rýnni eða málágreina, sem smíðir málmgripa (?), eðr lögmenn laga, the poets are judges in all matters of grammar and syntax, as smiths in workmanship, and lawyers in law, Skálda (Thorodd) 164; this passage as well as the preceding is erroneously rendered in the earlier translations, as also in Lex. Poet.

II. an author, originator; the revival of this ancient word, in quite a different sense, is curious; it does not occur in any of the earliest glossaries of the 17th century nor in the Bible nor in Vidalin, but, as it seems for the first time, in the Lexicon Islandico-Latinum, published at Copenhagen A. D. 1734, as a rendering of the Latin auctor, and was probably inserted by some learned philologist (Jón Ólafsson?) from the passage in Skálda, by a mistake. 2. by the end of the century it came to be used = a writer, and is now freq. in that sense, either rit-höfundr or singly; but still in 1781, in the preface to Fél. of that year, rituðr (writ-smith) and höfundr are both used, shewing that the latter was not yet settled, though at present the use of this word is quite fixed.

höku-nótt, f. mid-winter night, about the time of Epiphany, when the heathen Yule began; a ðv. Aey.: hann setti þat í lögum at hefja jólahald sem Kristnir menn ..., en ádr var jólahald hafti Hökunótt, þat var miðsvetrar-nótt (thus in Fms. i. 32, l. c.), ok haðin þriggja (þrettán?) náttu jól, Hkr. i. 138 (Hák. S. Áðalst. ch. 15). The Scot. bogmaney, = the last day of the year or a feast given on that day, is a remnant of this ancient word. The heathen Yule seems among the Scandinavians to have been celebrated about three weeks later than Christmas; but the Norse king Hakon, who had been brought up in Christian England, altered the time of the festival, so as to make it correspond with the English Yule or Christmas; and so the heathen hökunótt came to represent our Christmas Eve. The etymology is not known.

HÖLDR, m., in old MSS. spelt hældr or hælr, denoting that the d is inflexive, not radical; [the word therefore is not to be derived from halda, but is identical with A. S. hæleð, Germ. held, whence mod. Swed. and Dan. hjalte and belt, see halr]:—a Norse law term, a kind of bigber yeoman, like the statesman of Westmoreland, i. e. the owner of allodial land, mod. Norse odelsbonde; the höld is to be distinguished from a herir (q. v.) or a lendr maðr, who held land in fee from the king, see the interesting story in Har. S. Harðr. ch. 62 (Fms. vi. 278); the höld is thus defined, sá er hældr er hann hefir óðol at erðum tekit bæði eptir föður ok móður, þau er hans forellrar (forefathers) hafa átt ádr fyrir þeim, N. G. L. ii. 146; hölda tvá eða þendr ina beztu, i. 251. Icel. form is Hölgi, and of a woman, Helga, v. f., Landn.; prob. contracted from Hálogi, cp. the Dan. Holger and Russian Olga; Hölgi was the name of a mythol. king, Edda 83, whence Hölga-brúðr, f. the bride of Hölgi, or Hölga-tröll, n. (Skálda 168, Fms. xi. 134), the giantess of H.: hölða-brúðr and hörgu-brúðr are less correct forms, Nj. 131 (v. l.), Fb. i. 213; for the various readings in different MSS. see Jóns S. ch. 44, Nj. ch. 89: this is the name of two unird sisters worshipped by the earls of Hlaðir; the passage in Skálda i. e. refers to some lost myth concerning these sisters.

HÖLL, f., gen. hallar, often spelt hall without umlaut, Fb. i. 212,

I. 26, Fas. iii. 42, 87, Fms. viii. 191, v. l.; as also rhymed so in poets, e. g. Geisli 11; [A. S. beal, gen. bealle; Engl. ball; Hel. balla; but not found in old and mid. H. G., the mod. In earlier times it seems to have had a more general sense, which remains in a verse of Kormak, Korm. 42:—in the mythology and old poems 'hall' is also used of the hall of gods, giants, Vpm., Hým., Lv.; Val-höll, Valballa, the ball of the slain, of Odin, Gm., Edda: as also Guds höll, God's ball—the heaven, Geisli; dags höll, days' ball, the sky; höll fjalla, mountain ball, the sky; lífs höll, life's ball, the breast, Lex. Poët.:—in prose constantly, konungs-höll, a king's ball, or hall simply, passim. For the building, structure, seats of a hall, see the Sagas passim, Fagrsk. ch. 219, 230, Hrólf's S. Kr. ch. 34, 40, Jómsv. S. ch. 5, 22, Völs. S. ch. 3, Háls's S. ch. 12, Eg. S. ch. 8, Edda 2, 30–33, 82. As all heathen Scandinavian buildings were of timber, the hall of stone of Nj. ch. 6 is no doubt an anachronism. compounds: hallar-búnadr, -búníngir, m. the bangings of a ball, Fms. x. 235, xi. 16. hallar-dyrir, n. pl. ball-doors, Edda 2, Fas. i. 15, Al. 70. hallar-gólf, n. a ball-floor, Edda 31, Fms. iii. 188, vii. 157, Fas. i. 284. hallar-veggr, m. the wall of a ball, Fms. iv. 189, Sks. 709: HÖLL, name of an Icel. farm, Skáld H., whence Hallar-Steinn, a pr. name.

HÖRG, m., never f., for the form hörgr (Landn. 111) is merely an error; [A. S. bearg; O. H. G. baruc]:—a beaten place of worship. Distinction is to be made between hof (temple) and horg; the hof was a house of timber, whereas the horg was an altar of stone (the hátimbraðr in Vpm. is not literally erected on high places, or a sacrificial cairn (like haugr), built in open air, and without images, for the horg itself was to be stained with the blood of the sacrifice; hence such phrases as, to 'break' the horgs, but 'burn' the temples. The horg worship reminds one of the worship in high places of the Bible. The notion of a 'high place' still remains in the popular Icelandic phrase, það eru ekki uppi nema hæstu hörgar, only the highest bords jut out, when all lies under a deep snow. In provincial Norse a dome-shaped mountain is called borg (Ivar Aasen). The worship on horgs seems to be older than that in temples, but was in after times retained along with temple worship, and then, it seems, specially reserved for the worship of the goddesses or female guardians (disir), Hervar. S. ch. 1, Hdl. l. c., Edda l. c., cp. also Hörga-brúdr, f. the bride of the bords, see Högl. Many of the old cairns and hows are no doubt horgs or high places of worship of the heathen age. A third way of worshipping is recorded, viz. a portable booth or tabernacle in which the god was carried through the land, mentioned in Tacit. Germ. ch. 40; traces of this ancient worship were still found in Sweden at the close of heathendom, see the interesting tale of Gunnar Helming in Fms. ii. 73-78.

I Í J

I is the ninth letter; in the old Runic alphabet it was called iss or ier (Skálda 176), and represented by I (is köllum brú breiða of the Runic poem), a form borrowed from the Greek or Latin: but 'stunginn ís' (♠) was in later Runes used to represent e.

A. PRONUNCIATION, SPELLING.—I is either a vowel (i), or consonant (j), called jod: these are here treated separately: 1. the vowel i is sounded either short (i) or long (ī), the short (i) like Engl. hill, prolonged with a breath; but it is almost certain that in olden times it was sounded short, as in Engl. wit.

2. the long (ī) is sounded as Engl. e or es in evil, fert. 3. the j is sounded as Engl. y before a vowel, jata, jard, jól, as yata, yard, yole. The oldest writers bear witness to the use of j as a consonant; thus Thorodd says,—i þá er hann verðr fyrir samhljóðanda settr, Skálda 164; and the second grammarian,—en ef hljóðstafr (vowel) er næstr eptir hann, þá skiptisk hann í málstafr (consonant), svo sem já, jörð eða jór, 170; and Olave Hvítaskáld,—i ok a hafa þvi fleiri greinir, at þeir eru stundum samhljóðendr, sem í þessum orðum, íarl and útr, 176; but in syllables beginning with j (ja, jo, ju) in old alliterative poetry it always stands for the vowel, from the earliest poems down to the 15th century, e. g. jörð or ægi—íðja-græna, Vsp. 58; viltu nokkut jötunninn ríga | ýtum görir hann kosti seiga, þrymlur 2. 2; Ölmóðr hafði annan dag | jarnið þetta at sýna, Skálda R. 64, which, as now pronounced, would sound harsh, since in modern poetry syllables beginning with j cannot be used alliteratively with any other letter, cp. Pass. 37. 1, 10, 40. 8, 46. 3, 11, etc.; only in such words as eg (jeg), eta (jeta) can i serve both as a vowel and consonant, see Pass. 6. 2; but jeg in 5. 5, 10, (the verse 6 of the same hymn is a poetical licence); so also the name Jesús is now and then used alliteratively with a vowel, 47. 18, 21; the hymns of the Reformation follow the same usage. The pronunciation of j seems therefore to have changed: in early times it was probably similar to Engl. e in ear, tear, bear; an additional proof of this is, that the oldest spelling was, as in Anglo-Saxon, ea, eo...; and Thorodd himself probably wrote ea, e. g. esfu, earn, earl, for jafu, járn, jarl, see his words: in old poets ea sometimes makes two syllables, e. g. in the verse cited in Skálda 164 (of A. D. 1018); as also in the name Njáll (Niel), which is dissyllabic in the verses, Nj. ch. 136, 146. At a still earlier time j was probably sounded purely as a vowel.

II. in ancient MSS. i serves for both i and j; in MSS., esp. of the 15th century, j is used ornamentally for initial i, e. g. jnn = inn, as also in the double ij = i, e. g. tíjd = tíð, míjt = mítt, the j was introduced into print only in the last year of the eighteenth century. 2. an i is often inserted in MSS., esp. after g, k, so as to mark the aspirate sound, e. g. gieta = geta, gieta = geta, kier = kær, etc.; in inflexions it is also more correct to write eyjar, bæjar, than eyar, bæar:—ji is not written, but pronounced, e. g. vili (= vilji), but vilar.

B. CHANGES.—The i and e are exchanged in many root syllables, but i is usually the older, e the later if not the modern form, as, if and ef, brinna and brenna, tvinnr and trenur, þinnr and þrennr, miðl and meðal, minnma and mænma, gingu and gengu, fingu and fengu, tigr and tegr: the article varies between eun and inu:—the inflex. -endi and -indi:—Norre MSS. spell mek, þek, sek, = mik, þik, sik (e. g. Thom. Cd. Holm.). -ligr and -legr, gagligr and gagleggr: for the inflexive e and i see introduction to letter E (signif. B), p. 114:—i for y in old MSS., in firir, ifir, mindir, skildir, minni (monib), minnast (to kiss, mouth):—i and u are interchanged in inflexion, as, morginn and morgunn, vandill and vöndull; but esp. in the adjective inflexions -igr and -ugr, blóðigr and blóðugr, auðigr and auðugr.

II. the j in most instances originates from an e, either through absorption or contraction, as in jór (q. v.), or through the dissolution or breaking of e, as in jörð (q. v.); again, the i as initial is in most instances caused by absorption; as of n in in (in) and compds; of v or b in illr (evil) and compds; of d in some compds in f—from id:—in Gothic there is only a single word (eisarn, i. e. isarn = iron) with a long i initial.

III. by comparison with other Teutonic languages it is seen that a radical initial i or j has in the Scandinavian been dropped in a few words, while it has been kept in Gothic, Saxon, and German, thus Icel. ár, Goth. jār, Engl. year, Germ. jahr; Icel. ungr, Goth. juggs, Engl. young; Icel. ok, Goth. juk, Engl. yoke, Germ. joch, Lat. jugum; Icel. amí, ömurliqr, and O. H. G. jamar, Germ. jammer; Icel. upp, Goth. jup, Engl. up; Icel. ér (ye), Goth. jus; Icel. ostr (a chess), cp. Engl. yeast: in two words, jarteign and jurt, both of them probably foreign, the j stands for w: on the other hand, because of the resolution or breaking of vowels (Gramm. p. xxix, bottom), words which in Engl. and Germ. begin with e are in Icel. often to be found under j, thus Icel. jörð (old Scot. yerth) = Engl. earth, Germ. erde: there are also a few stray words,—jata (a manger) for eta, jeta for eta, jeg for eg (ek).

IV. the Icel. i answers to Ulf. ei (rísa, Goth. reisan), to mod. Germ. ei in zeit, Engl. i as in time, Icel. timi; in early German the diphthongs ei and i were, as in Icelandic, distinguished (zif, isarn, = mod. zeit, eisen).

mod. Dan. in a few words the Icel. short i is represented by an e, thus Icel. við, iðr, viðr, iðr, biðja, limr, vinr, sin, = Dan. ved, led, ved, sed, bede, lem, ven, sene, probably owing to the fact that the old Danish pronunciation of i was not the same as the present Icelandic.
